In Place

On a brisk Indiana escapades.

morning an 18 year old freshman girl

A 64-year-old lady rises bright and early to have break-wakes up at 6 a.m. to be ready for her 8:30 class.

Come 6:45, there won't be any hot water and fast with 800 of her closest friends. She drives on gently rolling county roads to her home away

she will have to wait 20 minutes for a shower. Although she was up until 4 a.m. studying for a test, she probably could have slept more had she not taken that two-hour walk with her male "friend." But, with her afternoon nap, she will be rested for that night's from home, which has been awarded for its architectual design and criticized for its not-so-fine cuisine. There, with her faithful cohort, she, like the Scylla in the ancient tale of Odysseus, keeps watch over the entrance to ensure that no student eats without paying.

A 21-year-old junior tumbles out of his loft at 8:28 a.m., throws on his baseball hat, grabs his bookbag, takes a swig of mouthwash and flies out the door to his 8:30 class. He is hoping today wasn't the day of the mid-term exam, but if it is, there is always the final.

A philosophy professor gathers his notes and prepares to lecture on the principle of the identity of the indiscernables, otherwise known as the "cookie monster" principle. He enters class by throwing his hat into the room and begins his lecture by opening a can of pop into a microphone.

more contribute to and are affected by the place we've come to call home.

One hundred years ago, a small Methodist school left Fort Wayne, Indiana for the booming metropolis of Upland. The original ten acre campus had no buildings so classes were held in churches. Although buildings have come and gone and the campus has grown in acreage, the goal of Christian higher education has been constant.

Throughout the past century, Taylor University and Upland, Indiana, have shared an identity and have become as inseparable in the minds of students, faculty, and alumnias peanutbutter and jelly, Jay and Janie, and faith and learning.

Upland, Taylor's Home

Celebrating our Community

Despite all the complaining that can be heard on a given Saturday night in Wengatz Hall, Upland provides Taylor with more than real estate. The relationship between the school and the village is one that is good for members of both communities.

Besides providing employment to local residents, the school brings many customers to local businesses, which in turn means jobs for Uplanders. But the relationship is in fact mutually beneficial.

Not only can students enjoy an Ivanhoe's shake but programs such as Kid's carnival, Community Outreach and One-on-One provide students with the opportunity to give of themselves. The lessons they learn are not soon to be forgotten.

While there are no movie theaters or bowling alleys in Upland, the Upland Auction provides entertainment for some students every Saturday night. Where else could a poor college student get a box of old books for fifty cents?

The town also serves as home to many off-campus students. As neighbors, students have a chance to interact with those who live around them.

Finally, the people of Upland have opened up their churches to countless college students looking for a place to worship. While many students do not find a church home in Upland, it is not because they are not made to feel welcome.

The relationship between Taylor and Upland has enhanced and will continue to enhance the Taylor experience.

A Century in Place

Celebrating the History of our Community

July 31, 1893 is a memorable day in the history of Taylor University. The students, faculty and staff packed the school's possessions into a single boxcar and left Fort Wayne to establish a new tradition in Upland, Indiana.

Taylor began in 1846 as Fort Wayne Female College with an enrollment of 100 women in the first year. Four years later, the first men also enrolled. In 1890 the name changed in honor of Bishop William Taylor, a Methodist missionary to Africa.

Despite surviving multiple financial difficulties and name changes, conditions deteriorated rapidly. By 1892 enrollment had dropped to 77 students, campus buildings were condemned and the campus sold. Classes continued to meet in rented facilities but finances were horribly depleted.

Taylor President Thaddeus Reade accepted an invitation to preach at the Upland Methodist church. During his visit he expressed concern regarding Taylor University's distressing situation. John White, the Upland Methodist minister, and J.W. Pittenger became interested in assisting the struggling university and resolved to find a solution.

They negotiated the agreement. The Upland Land Company invited Taylor University to consider Upland and backed up its request with an offer of ten acres of land and $10,000. Taylor's board of trustees accepted.

During the first year in Upland, the president's office and dining commons were located in rented buildings in downtown Upland, classes met in churches and students lived in local homes.

Taylor University has seen considerable improvement during the past century. No longer would all of Taylor's possessions fit into one boxcar. Under the theme "Celebrating Our Community," Taylor University is setting aside 1993 to celebrate a century of the Taylor tradition in Upland.

To try to understand the "Taylor Experience," one must look beyond the happenings of the classroom, observing the building of friendships and the playing of games. The experience can be as loud as a Morris hall meeting or as quiet as a late night of studying. Regardless, it is not one of solitude but one of interaction. Even though every student is but one of many, each individual is an integral part of the whole. Taylor is a place to live, but more importantly it is a place to be.

Return to the Village Border

Taylor Defeats DePauw

By Dorie McDougal

The village borders were bursting at the seams as alumni of all ages returned to their alma mater for Homecoming weekend, a time to celebrate the life, relationships and new ventures God has given us.

Upon leaving Taylor, students disperse around the world and are no longer able to see those people that they have gotten to know so well. Aside from weddings the first couple of years, Homecoming is the only guaranteed time to see at least some of the old gang.

If Homecoming is not a return to see familiar faces, then it is certainly a return to familiar places—places where alumni lived, learned, laughed, loved and then as time went on, places they had to leave to move on with their lives.

Alumni's return to Taylor and the life they once had here was facilitated by activities planned by this year's cabinet. Homecoming cabinet was headed up by co-directors Zoe Bond and Brian Hoover. They chose the theme "The Village Border and Beyond" to reflect Taylor's strong sense of community, carried by alumni nationwide and around the world.

Highlights for alumni included the dedication of the Randall Environmental Studies Center, the alumni brunch, the football game and Taylor's first win of the season, class reunions and a concert by Steve Amerson, a '76 Taylor grad.

Highlights for students included week-long inter-class competitions, the Bell Tower sing-a-long, airband, a sneak preview video during chapel for Steve Amerson's ('76) concert, the coronation of the King Micah Newhouse and Queen Candace Tabb, a picnic lunch outside the Dining Commons and, did we mention, the football team's victory over DePauw.

The Value of Parent's Weekend

By Julie Scroggins

Taylor Defeats Franklin

So what's a fall weekend good for? A fall weekend in a little stoplightless Indiana cornfield town? A breezy (okay, a ripping-gnashing-relentless hurricane winded) flatland called Upland (yes, UP-land) where Taylor University lies?

Well, the weekend of October 23-25, 1992 drew crowds to this 160 acre plot. Crowds of those over 40 and under 14. Crowds who walked a bit slower and held more Kodak instamatics. Crowds who walked in holding the thicker wallets and walked out to the rhythm of spare change in their pockets. Crowds who carried seat cushions into Wheeler Memorial stadium and walked out with the winning team's program.

So what's a fall weekend good for?

This fall weekend in big town U.S.A., a.k.a. Upland, was good for a Friday night with Ken Davis, the comedian who brought the chapel to tears and families together in laughter—and sharing. It was good for a Steve and Maria Gardner concert designed for PARENTS (weekend). It was good for a Trojan football triumph. And it was good for an ever awaited Sunday sermon by Dr. Kessler.

Okay, but what is the real reason we have Parent's weekend at Taylor every fall? Why do the students clean their rooms (okay, shove the laundry under the couch cushions and blow the hair and dust balls under the bed), and put a few used-looking and strategically placed books and folders on the desk? Why do they iron a shirt (the first day) and wear their jeans without holes? Why do the girls make "Welcome Mom and Dad!" signs at the E.T.C.? Why do the guys think that if they're wearing a clean shirt, their mom won't be able to tell that they haven't washed their sheets since the last time they were home? Why? What is the real reason for parents weekend. . . ?

The best D.C. food all year, a FREE meal (or seven) out, FREE groceries, a FREE shopping spree, and of course—a homemade care package.

Airband

By Annie Bergsten

Live or Memorex?

Ah, Airband, the time when all lips aren't sealed and you get points for faking it. A time for reality and fantasy to meet. A time for people to ask "Is it live or is it Memorex?"

This year's fall airband, sponsored by ICC, used the theme of the 1992 Presidential Election. The cuts and jeers at President Clinton revealed who the majority of Taylor students were pulling for in the impending election.

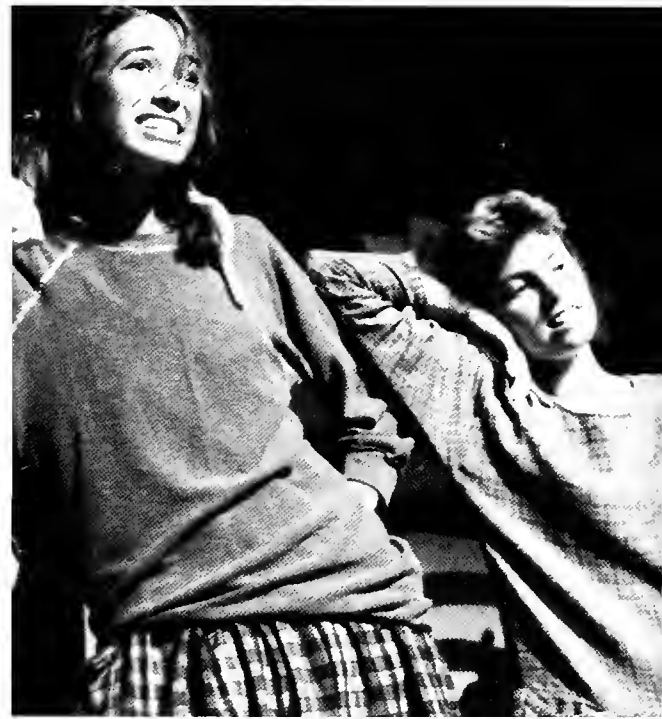

The politically incorrect night began with a visit from Joe Foote and Norman Yatooma as George Bush and Ronald Reagan taking over for Wayne and Garth in "Ron's World."

The crowd was reminded of childhood and lazy afternoons watching Sesame Street when Eric Marcotte and Jason Dreistadt asked the audience "Would You Like to Buy an 'O'?"

The first place winner told of the rough life they have living in an orphanage or was it Second West Olson, with "It's a hard Knock Life," from the musical Annie? Jane Oyler, Olson hall director, played an all-too realistic Mrs. Hanigan.

All in all, airband was Rush Limbaugh's dream. Here's to next year where the emcees will probably rip on President Bill Clinton as much as we did if not more. If they don't, they are missing out on some good material.

80's Night

Something New

By DM²

In the past couple years there has not been much variety in the "Variety Shows". So, this year, Elizabeth Berry and the rest of the Student Activities Council decided to change things. Instead of a variety show, a night was dedicated to remembering the eighties.

It was a time to reminisce on the biggest decade of our young lives. Rediger Auditorium was transformed into a roller rink that reminded us of the days when braces, parachute pants and Izod shirts with the collar were worn. The not-yet classic music brought back memories of our first crush, our first kiss and Friday nights at the mall.

The emcees all came out on roller skates. Various and sundry renditions of songs from the eighties were performed. Some favorites were "The Eye of the Tiger," "The Jitterburg," "Stray Cat Strut" and "We are the World." Called 4 traveled through nearly ten years of television sitcoms and there was an interesting flashlight choreographed routine to a Janet Jackson medley.

Brad David and company performed Quiet Riot's "We're Not Going to Take It," reminding us of the rebellious attitude that we had to one extent or another. The night make it seem like we were in high school again, without the acne.

Parked in Time

An Escape From the 90's

By David Wehrle

Have you ever wondered if you were really born in the right decade? Is the family photo album really that embarrassing, or do you secretly "dig" the way your parents used to dress? Have you ever been tempted to sneak up to the attic in search of the bell-bottoms dad used to wear, or that avocado mini-skirt jumper that mom loved so much? At Taylor's annual Nostalgia night, THAT'S GROOVY, MAN!

On the evening of March 17, students jammed into Rediger Chapel Auditorium for PARKED IN TIME, 1993's Nostalgia Night. Those who knew what was cool dressed in styles dating from the 40's to the 70's. They came to escape the 90's for a brief few hours and to experience the sights and sounds of popular music from years past.

For those into poodle skirts, '57 Chevy's, penny loafers and the like, senior Beth Delmastro and crew performed the 50's hit "Mr. Postman." Even Elvis (a.k.a. Kyle McClellan) showed up, 'Ding Dongs' in hand, to get a taste of an age gone by. The music of the clean-cut "European Invasion" persuasion was represented as Mark Seifert and his band performed a medley of Beatles tunes.

Jim Hoffman's crowd pleasing rendition of Peter, Paul and Mary's "Puff, the Magic Dragon" brought back Childhood memories. To remind the crowd of the growing power of women in the 70's, Annie Bergsten had it out with husband Clark Holland over where, when and how to drive their VW Bug. Joel Gilbert and his troop of cellophane wrapped beauty salon babes rounded the 70's experience with "Beauty School Dropout," a hit from the movie "Grease."

The evening would not have been complete without a little a cappella music, so Called 4 sang the timeless hit "In the Still of the Night." Dr. Shultze lent academic credibility to the whole affair with his musical analysis of the Simon and Garfunkel tune "Homeward Bound," as performed by Lee Douma.

Finally, it came time to realize that the 90's is our time. Thanks to all of the hard work by performers and organizers, we were able to escape to the nostalgic world of sight and sound and, if only for a little while, Park in Time.

Over the Rhine

A New Menu

Coffeehouses Offer Variety By Jeff Cannell

For a few years now S.A.C. coffeehouses have been famous for serving carbonated water instead of coffee. This year, alternative music was added to the menu.

Many people were happy to see Taylor provide an entertainment outlet suited to their needs. No longer did students have to drive three hours to see a band they enjoyed.

Coffeehouse coordinator Zoe Bond's goals were to provide entertainment for those dissatisfied with CCM and Top 40 music. Styles of music ranged from alternative to jazz.

September saw a little controversy regarding a "mosh pit" that started at the Stinging Rain concert half way through the show. An apology from Miss Bond printed in The Echo seemed to rectify the situation.

Chad Beck returned to campus to showcase his music and was joined by former roommate and Greek scholar Kevin Diller for an encore performance of their '92 Nostalgia Night act.

Over The Rhine performed a spring show for a packed-out Dome audience.

For three years they have had a loyal following from Taylor going to see them in Cincinnati whenever they performed. Shortly after their Taylor show, they were signed for a six album contract to I.R.S. records.

Other acts included the Hal Melia Jazz Group, from Cincinnati and folk singer Jimmy VanStory. Matt Dimes summed up the year's coffeehouses well in one word—Twitchin'.

To Kill A Mockingbird

Embodying a New View

By Alex Patterson

It was Maycomb, Alabama, and it was back in 1935 . . . back when ugly words were first shouted at us—back at the beginning of an experience that brought a man to his death.

And it brought Boo Radley storming out of that shut up house—the attack on me—Jem's arm broken—and nother man killed! But that isn't what I want to remember . . . Probably enough years have gone by—enough so I can look back—perhaps enough so now I can do the one thing my father asked. No—there was one other thing. When he gave us air rifles, he asked us never to kill a mockingbird."

This fall, 29 Taylor students along with Steven Wade, an actor from Marion, Indiana, formed a double cast to present To Kill A Mockingbird, a play written by Christopher Sergel from the novel by Harper Lee.

The audience travels back in time with the narrator, Miss Jean Louise Finch, as she remembers her childhood and as she tries to do the only thing her father asked of her—to see things from other people's point of view.

It is upon this condition that the audience witnesses the lives of two struggling children, Scout and Jem and their father, Atticus, a lawyer, as he fights to save the life of a man falsely accused of rape.

Although Atticus presents a flawless case in court, he knows he cannot win. You see, he is not battling the court system. He is battling the truth.

And the truth is that hatred and racism pervade the heart of Maycomb, Alabama. When the townspeople must choose between the testimony of a black man and that of a white woman, they rule against justice.

They rule in favor of social norms, the consequence of which is death.

To Kill A Mockingbird opened all of our eyes. The play revealed that our nation was not fair in 1935.

Living it on stage revealed that it is not fair today.

And we all learned the same lesson that Scout did: when we open ourselves up, and try to see things from other people's perspectives, we "get on better with all kinds."

"It goes to the essence of a man's conscience" Atticus Finch (Joe Johns) tells his daughter Scout (April Fausnight) about the equal rights of every man.

Deathtrap

By Karen Stafford

Socially Unredeemable

"Lord, we know that this play has no social redeeming value..." -Dr. Oliver Hubbard Little did Dr. Ollie Hubbard realize when he prayed these words before a performance of Deathtrap that they would be printed in black and white forever.

In fact, Deathtrap was filled with the unexpected. Sidney Bruhl, played by spirit-gummed sophomore, Christopher Thornton, plots to kill a younger, more aspiring playwright, Clifford Anderson (Tim McDaniel). Cliff arrives one evening and Sid strangles him with a garrote.

So Cliff is dead, Sid lives, and all is well, right? Wrong! Cliff is really alive and gives Myra (Dawn Russo, Sid's wife), a heart attack when he returns from the garden grave where he's been pushing up daisies for the last fifteen minutes.

Sid and Cliff plot to write a death-defying thriller, but jealousy gets the better of them. Sid kills Cliff, but Cliff returns once again, stabbing Sid with a medieval arrow and leaves Helga TenDorp (Karen Stafford) and Porter Milgrim (Matthew Minnes) to tie up loose ends.

There were unexpected surprises for the cast as well as for the characters, like the Mexican bean casserole that turned up in Matt "Clueless" Minnes' briefcase one evening. We all enjoyed dedicating the show to Joey Buttafuoco (Joey and Amy live forever).

But the most wonderful of all surprises was the close, family-like atmosphere created by this cast of five students.

I will never forget this production, this cast and crew, and the wonderful spaghetti at the cast party.

Many thanks go to Tricia Cable, assistant director, Peter Marshall and all the others who made this production a success.

Matt Hardy

Spurred by greed, Sidney Bruhl (Chris Thornton) pretends to "murder" an aspiring playwright Clifford Anderson (Tim McDaniel) as part of an elaborate plan to do in his wife and gain a hefty inheritance in Deathtrap.

Charley's Aunt

By Sandy Walker

A Farce

When someone asks me to describe the story line of a farce, I give a 20 minute explanation of the intricate details of the plot.

To save re-hashing Charley's Aunt, I'll summarize the basic theme as one of mistaken identity, play-acting, "star crossed" lovers and a plethora of aunts.

Charley's Aunt is sentimental to me, because it's my last role in a Taylor production. The cast of this show will remain dear in the memory of their encouraging spirits and in the glimpses I have seen of our Father through their self-sacrifice and concern.

The opportunity to once again perform a comedy is a cherished treasure. Being a part of an audience's escape from the pressures of life and hearing their laughter has been a fun and energizing experience.

Specific memories I carry away from Charley's Aunt include waltzing lessons, Wendy's "bruise," improvised lines, "concentration," Doritos, Jack's last Kiss, Robert Redford, Buttafuoco and Hal's confession.

However, the backstage jokes and the great friends I've made dim in comparison to the privilege I feel in praising the Creator who sustains and enables.

Matt Hardy

Masquerading as "Charley's Aunt from Brazil, where the nuts come from," Lord Fancourt Babberley (Jason Welch) accidentally pours tea into a hat, to the surprise of Oxford co-eds Kitty Verdon (Karen Stafford), Amy Spettigue (Kristin Wolgemuth), Charley Wykeham (Steve Roggenbaum), and Jack Chesney (Matthew Minnes) as Brassett (Nathan Smith) looks on.

BERGWALL HALL

Traditions in the Making

By Ava Archibald

Who says Bergwall is a secluded dorm? Okay! All Bergwallians are sick of being known as the forgotten dorm.

Being known as the Holidorm or the Bergwall Inn, Bergwall has become somewhat isolated from other dorms on campus.

But wait! Is Bergwall different this year? Is the dorm actually coming out of its shell?

Is it actually developing traditions?

What about the annual Sigma Beta Fest? Or maybe 1st and 2nd floors playing stickball between the D.C. and this most worthy residence hall every Spring.

Which other dorm can listen to Julie Mowery strumming the harp peacefully as its occupants go to sleep?

And now that we have a beautiful baby girl (Eliza Marie Mowery) to take care of, who wouldn't want to live in Bergwall?

Sure, we're still pretty new, but we have our 3rd Berg Polka Dot Nite and our very own Fall Fest and Christmas with Jay . . . not to speak of our own Bergwall Breakfast on Taylathon Saturday.

Who could resist stopping by the Bergwall Lounge to play a couple of rounds of euchre or maybe . . . spades?

We'll be looking forward to seeing you.

MARY TOWER ENGLISH HALL

The Girls You Marry

I warn you, as the reader, that the writer of this blurb is a four-year English Hall resident. So I am a little biased as well as tremendously sentimental as I pack up to leave the place I have called home for the past four years.

Each residence hall is unique in its own way—English is no exception. The following will help explain...

Marriage— This trite saying claims that, "you marry the girls in English." The accuracy of this statement is debatable, but there is no question . . . if you want to get engaged just live on First South— by far the most represented wing in ring-downs.

Suites— Without a doubt, these are one of the benefits to this hall— well usually. Between the hours of 9 a.m. and 11 p.m. it's great. Suites provide a unifying family room. A place to hang out, chat, eat TOPPIT, and procrastinate from doing homework. But those 10 "quiet hours" in between end up being anything but quiet.

Med Rooms— Offer the get away effect without the discomfort of leaving the building. Of course the med rooms get a bit stuffy, but no one should be meditating too long in a closet.

Probably the most distinctive quality about English Hall this year is that it is the last year that the residents can claim that no man has ever lived in the hall— But we gladly welcome Joel

Kline as our hall director's husband-to-be as well as our hall brother. (By the way, Joel, do you know anything about cars?)

LES GERIG HALL

By Lisa Rozema

The Ultimate Ratio

Kim Case, Hall Director

Contrary to popular opinion, Gerig women are more than just study partners . . . And the "4-G Stallions," as they termed themselves, are among the finest "brothers" anywhere on campus. Because Gerig is the second smallest dorm, the "Taylor Family" idea is carried on by its 96 residents. (But maintaining the Taylor ratio with its 32 guys and 64 women.)

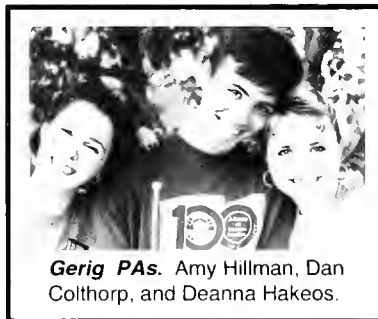

Gerig people are more than just people you live with—they are friends to spend time with. The famous December snowball fight hosted by Gerig which drew the involvement of Wengatz, Bergwall and Campus Safety is just one example of the spontaneity Gerig people love. And the list goes on . . . Going to movies, sleeping over (No guys, please!) in the lounge, playing slipper soccer, laying out in the backyard, ordering garlic bread, visiting each other during Open House . . . Even the Hall Council's planned activities, including movies, Christmas decorating, dinners and speakers, draw Gerig crowds.

The nerve center of all this activity is the Gerig Desk, ruled over by the Desk Worker Extraordinaire who hands out packages, sells "Little Debbies" on a "Special of the Fleeting Moment" basis, hosts pizza parties, plays cards with whomever has the time and acts as general Gerig know-all. And, as it should be, all of these activities contribute to the atmosphere of family—which is not confined by the walls of the hall. Anywhere on campus, a "Gerig Person" can spot another—and feel a sense of camaraderie.

But Gerig does lack in one area. Quiet Hours. Go figure.

SAMMY MORRIS HALL

By Julie Scroggins

Each Man In Place

The Foundation which supports Second Sammy which carries the Bro-Ho which sets under the Penthouse . . . is characterized by its outstanding, structurally sound construction—uh, yeah.

Sobesides the great view of the Hurland and easy updates on the reconstruction of Swallow Robin a couple years ago and the continuing, soothing sounds of construction as the new Communication Arts building is built out back next year, what more could you ask for a residence hall?

As the bedroom walls fall around their occupants, these men have the security that there are some nearby stable structures for shelter in the case of a tornado or a flood.

Or the first fire drill of the year. Which happens to be a full-fledged hall event for Sammy Morris residents and their sister wings. Who else can offer hand-picked ladies of campus a volleyball game and ice cream on the front lawn as the entire Upland fire department verifies smokeless hallways (but quietly realizes that the hall is in fact Upland's greatest single fire hazard)?

The hum of constant construction and fire drill parties aren't the only bonuses. Easy access to foosball and meal transfers are only two of a plethora of benefits that the infamous Dome offers—which is directly connected to Morris.

Sammy Morris hall has four distinct floors of men who have one thing in common—they are all unique. (Paradoxical? Not really). The Foundation (first floor) would seem to be a scary name, considering the hall's foundation is a cement slab designed for the 37-year temporary housing that it has been. Second Sammy (this isn't a trick name) residents are the only ones that come between Foundation and The Brotherhood.

The freshmen who are blessed to become residents of The Bro-Ho experience a double blessing (or curse) as they are put on trial in "court." But this is all anyone has ever told of this third floor ritual—the death threat may have something to do with this.

And there is a lingering resident of The Brotherhood named Fubbbs. Last year his name was Fubbs. And seven years ago his name was Fubs. He still sits in the Brotherhood section of the balcony during chapel.

And if you know anything about Morris' Brotherhood, you won't be caught asking (as one resident did) "Mizpah? What's it mean to me?"

Penthouse is the floor of plush carpets, big screen TV's, jacuzzis in personal bathrooms, walk-in closets and room service by Viola. (Isn't that what all penthouses are like?)

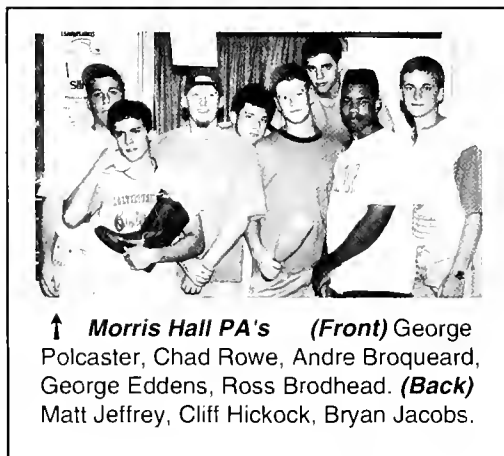

And the cleaning service is especially nice after a few paint ball wars.

Morris Hall residents will always know what the roach factor is and will have to get used to not yelling "shower!" after flushing when they go home each summer.

They are proud of the fact that theirs is the only residence hall named after a student—a student who initiated unity.

And proud of the fact that Sammy Morris in 1992-93 continues to be a place of unity.

(Ed. Note: Julie Scroggins did not live in Morris Hall. This is all hearsay.)

SWALLOW-ROBIN HALL

The Untouchables

By Alex Patterson

Perhaps you have seen one of us—from a distance—across campus. Or maybe you are lucky enough to actually know one of us. You have probably heard us in the D.C. (Loudest table, second only to the Bro-Ho guys) and cursed us for incessantly re-serving the first three rows in chapel.

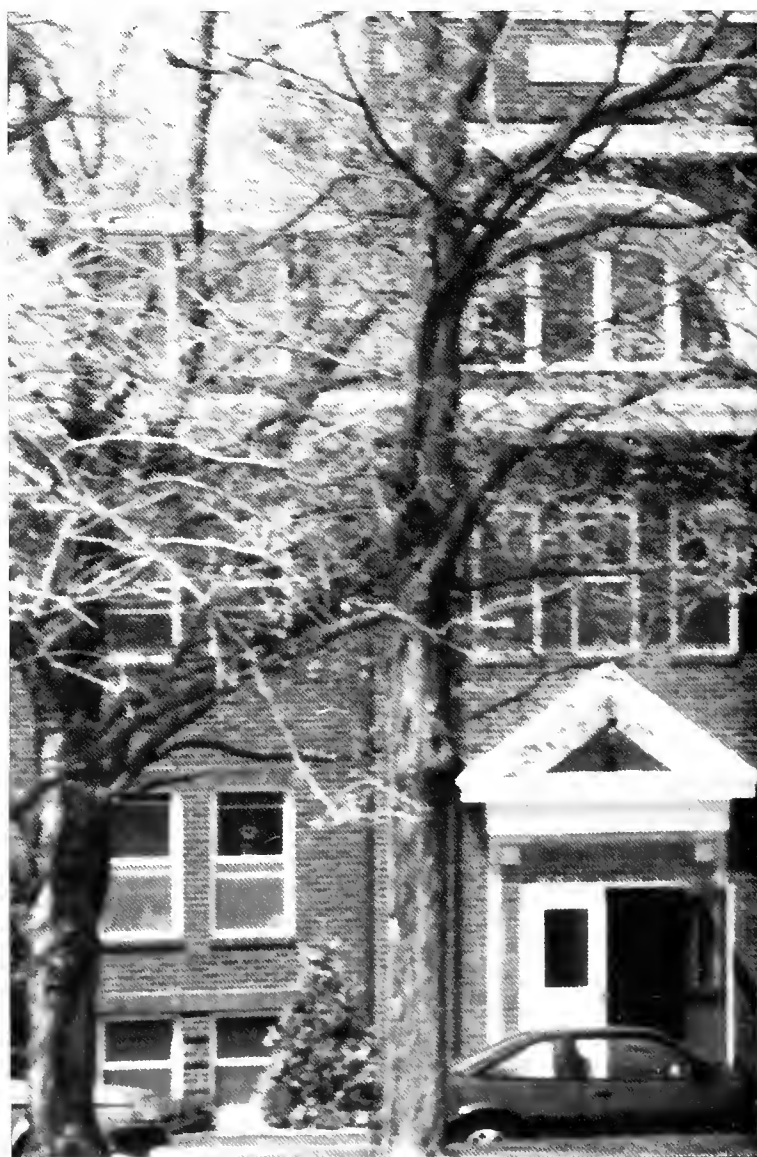

Who are we? Where do we come from? How can you earn the privilege of touching one of the 24 women and 46 men who are blessed with the perfect residence?

We have asked ourselves the same questions. Our ladies are not "the chicks you date" nor "the girls you marry." Our men are not the "weenies" nor the "morons." We are not the "brats" of campus—and we never study. So what are we? And where do we come from?

We come from a place far, far away. It is an incredible eight minute path that so few have traveled. We live in a world of carpet, air-conditioning and big rooms. Our floors creak loudly—echoing the voices of a 75-year history.

We are a people of the finest quality, of the most divine sense of humor. We are a family of lounge lizards, euchre fanatics, night owls (and a few VAX-aholics). If you have been here, you know that we are bizarre. You know that we are strange . . . and wonderful.

So who are we? And where do we come from—these 70 untouchables running wildly across campus in BEP shirts (as mysterious as the BTTW sweatshirts). We are the Few, the Proud, we are . . . SWALLOW ROBIN!

OLSON HALL

Fire Drills and More

By Juliana Higgins

Fire drills (!) dominate Olson memories, along with twister parties (2CO), masquerade parties and bands with glowing masks (2WO), paper forests at halloween (1EO), prayer and praise in second lounge, candy kisses in front of 3EO doors for that "first kiss" with a current "male friend," beating on the vending machine for the candy bar that's stuck, water gun wars (never!), broken vacuums, Trudy and Ang playing their guitars at hall meetings, Graceland t-shirts, tornado drills (watch for flash flooding), the 1WO return-to-childhood party, sulfur smells permeating the dorm due to 2EO's clogged shower, decorating the Olson Christmas tree, "Please take your hair with you when you leave the shower" (2EO), Olson Hall square dance (dancing at Taylor?), Tina Weed's engagement for fools ringdown (April Fool's), 3CO's crazy freshman initiation, the 1st Olson and 1st Wengatz hockey game, the 3rd Olson and 3rd Wengatz trip to the Pacer's game, 2WO's "It's a Hard Knock Life" (airband), Jane as Mrs. Hannigan (We love you, Miss Oyler), the Olson Hall Fun Run (walk, blade, crab walk, crawl), snow cones and cotton candy at Taylathon, no stamps or quarters at the front desk, service projects on 3WO and, of course, more fire drills.

WENGATZ HALL

Men In Hallowed Quarters

By David Wehrle

Don Helton

engatz Hall: the splendor of her hallowed corridors, the modesty of men who inhabit her generous, if simple, chambers, the majesty and splendor of her fame surpassed only by noble reflections of scholars who have frequented her portals, the steadfastness of her masonry (each brick a member of the eternal community within her) and her indefatigable mortar (a symbol of the love that binds brothers).

Dave Askelund
Hall Director

For those men who have called her "home" through the past four (or perhaps for some, five) years, the sorrow of parting with her is tempered only by the joy of their higher calling. It is a sorrow such as the bard deemed "sweet."

The festive and sovereign occupations of the 1992-93 academic year at Wengatz will always be remembered, including freshman initiations, hell week, a mysterious three-point shooting contest, the secret rock ritual, 4:45 p.m. dinners, a night with the Huckleberry Boys, pontooning expeditions on Prairie Creek Reservoir, soaking the sister wing (and various other pranks upon the other sex), the infamous three-way call, the hanging computer, Nintendo and Sega parties, the bottomless cup of coffee, wing bathrobes, group sing-in-the-shower concerts, Wengatz crushing Morris in the Great Snow War, Youth Conference slip-n-slide, Wengatz recycles and of course, our first true loves— Barb and Linda.

WEST VILLAGE

By Kevin Diller

Did You Know?

West Village is the only place on campus where it's safer to go outside during a tornado.

West Village is the only place on campus where you still take your garbage out to the curb.

West Village is the only place on campus from which the Environmental Center is a reasonable walk.

West Village is the only place on campus that prospective students never see.

West Village is the only place on campus where you can go to the bathroom with carpet under your feet.

West Village is the only place on campus that provides hookups for your own washer and dryer . . . Thanks.

West Village is the only place on campus where 9 out of 10 students have had a parking ticket.

West Village is the only place on campus where rain hurts your ears.

West Village is the only place on campus where you can take a shower and watch a softball game (Mod 6).

West Village is the only place on campus you won't find Paul Lightfoot.

OFF-CAMPUS

Dear Mom,

By Krista Blissenbach

Can you believe I graduate in a week? It's strange how fast this year has gone by.

The underclassmen have been applying for off-campus housing. Some of them are getting approved and some of them are still on the waiting list.

Remember last year when I wasn't approved yet? I was so happy last summer when I got that blessed phone call telling me and my roommates that we could live off-campus.

All we could think of was no more P.A.'s; no more wing meetings, hall meetings, fire drills, or Dining Commons. No more screaming freshmen running down the hall at midnight, and especially, no more community bathrooms.

Finally, I can brush my teeth in the bathroom and leave my toothbrush there. I can do aerobics in my apartment and not hit my desk or the loft when Jane Fonda says to "make it burn."

The best thing about living off-campus is having guys over whenever we want— during the approved times, of course, Mom.

I learned how to cook my own food this year— yes, I am getting the four food groups. Spaghetti seems to be my forte. I don't think I've ever eaten more pasta in my life than I have this past year.

I have also learned just how expensive a box of cereal is and I now understand the importance of stocking up on toilet paper.

You were right, we did need a vacuum cleaner, and that glass cleaner came in handy. I learned how to dust, scrub a bathtub, wash dishes, and make my bed this year. Most of the time we cleaned because you or another mom was coming to visit, but I learned those things— that's what's important.

I learned the secrets of the housing here in Upland. Casa Patricia is affectionately referred to as "Melrose Place" by its occupants. Porterhouse has been called Briarwood for a few years, but I still slip and start to say Porter every now and then.

Fairlane is still the "Projects," and students in Delta can tell you that there is a rush hour in Upland— and it's loud. I'll confess that I am jealous of people who live in a house, especially now that it's getting warm outside. They have their own private yard for laying out. Deb Golden and I keep going over to the Romig House (the Intramural Queens) to get some sun in their backyard.

Weekends are the most interesting aspects of life off-campus. "Hanging out" is now a weekend activity that I look forward to doing. I spent more money during the first weekend my freshman year than I have on all the weekends this past year. I think the most expensive thing I did on a weekend this year was to pay $20 for a haircut.

We don't even make plans anymore— we just wait to see what happens. Usually we end up waiting the whole weekend for something to happen. At least in the dorm we could count on cheap pick-a-dates to fill our social calendars.

Now I watch T.V. with the guys upstairs, hit golf balls around campus, or help make wedding plans with my many engaged friends. And let's not forget the Dollar Theater (that God-send) in Muncie. We sure have saved a lot of money this year by seeing movies there.

I am going to miss my neighbors and their stereos. Thanks to them I have a new appreciation for Neil Young, Garth Brooks and Arrested Development. It's a strange phenomenon to hear their music through the walls. I liked it best when our dishes would rattle in time to the songs.

I have matured into a responsible young woman prepared for life on my own during my year in an off-campus apartment. I have paid my bills on time, learned how to split the extra penny on our electric bill three ways, and locked and chained the door every night.

Mom, I think I can handle this life in the real world thing. Keep your fingers crossed.

The Way to Play

Off-Campus Dominates

By Greg Flick

It seems as if the new Off-Campus application has a battery of questions about previous intramural experience. This year the majority of the intramural championship t-shirts were awarded to members of Off-Campus intramural teams.

Over the last three years, the intramural program has grown to play a large part in the lives of many Taylor students, both on and off campus, as it works to instill unity in the housing groups through athletic participation.

This year participation was outstanding, with the season starting with 36 flag football teams and more than 600 participants.

In both the men's and women's league, the Off-Campus teams were victorious in the championship games.

The Off-Campus women were also victorious during soccer season.

The soccer season began for 387 participants and 27 teams, aided by the purchase of new aluminum goals which didn't break as they were hit.

During Interterm, 46 co-ed teams with 375 players found that six-on-six volleyball was a great way to spend a January night. (A late January night for many.)

Second semester at Taylor always means basketball--lots of basketball.

Once again, Taylor hosted the Schick three-on-three tournament. After winning at Taylor, the team of John Mark Adkison, Mark Syswerda, Mark Bagley and Brent Peters went on to win the Indiana state tournament.

This win placed them in the Mid-West regional where they were quarter-finalists.

Back in the Odle Gym, 480 men and women on 66 teams participated in the basketball league.

Once again, off-campus dominated by winning both the men's A level and B level championships.

As the Spring rains fell, softball season began. In between thunderstorms, 41 men's and co-ed teams with 375 participants attempted to run (slip and slide) around the muddy base paths.

This year the program was once again under the direction of Coach James Law and his team of seven supervisors.

The All-Sports Championship Points were added to the intramural program this year to reward the housing unit which had the greatest number of points based on participation and performance during the year.

The inaugural winners were First East Wengatz for the men and a combination of West Village/Swallow Robin for the women.

This year, intramurals really were The Way to Play!

The Taylathon Tradition

A Glorious Day for the Spokeheads

By Dorie McDougal

This year's Taylathon was a glorious event as both the trike and bike races were won by the seniors.

The start of this 39 year-old tradition was officially announced as always from the "purple monster" (which happens to be yellow). This year's master of ceremonies was a sibling act of Kris and Kyle McClellan with special field reporters Kristi Dyck and Annie Bergsten. While Kyle, who was in rare form, took every opportunity to rip on anyone that he could, Kris, the elementary education teacher, was oh-so encouraging as she commended every class on every single hand-off.

Every year the teams are required to create a clever introduction. This year's were, for the most part, successful (with the exception of some of the senior guys who took themselves too seriously).

The girls' introductions were all very humorous. My favorite triker introduction was the seniors' (not just because they are all my closest friends). They magically fit ten girls inside a Honda CRX wearing their caps and gowns. They raced to graduation to "Chariots of Fire" where they were given their diplomas and their fictitious majors were announced. My favorite bikers' introduction was the juniors' --who entered on a flatbed tow-truck in their overalls to "Slow Ride" by Foghat and assisted the helpless junior girls in a broken-down, beat-up Chevy (that mustered up enough strength to drive up onto the flatbed).

The trike race was very exciting and unlike the bike race, it was close. Seniors started in the lead but were passed by the juniors and sophomores— for a glorious moment (you have to start somewhere). By the second lap the seniors regained their place (powered by Misty Tinholt) and came in first. The juniors were second, the freshman third and the sophomores last.

Aside from the senior victory there were various other highlights to this year's bike race. The juniors redeemed themselves from the past two years of futility by earning second place. They recorded fast times, including a "52" second lap by Mark Wilson (it must have been downhill in a hurricane), but their numerous penalties kept them from winning the race.

Sophomore highlights include a strong first lap win by Eric Matthews and a lead over the juniors for part of the race. The freshman gained experience and have three more years to compete.

Senior rider Greg Flick summed up the freshmen's chances of winning when he said, "The only way the freshmen will win is if the rapture comes and they are the only unsaved ones." (Let's hope that's not the case.)

Freshman Chris Lake receives the MVP award because he provided the audience with what they came to see—wrecks! He had five total.

All in all it was a good day. The weather was great. And, the spokeheads had their moment of glory.

Going Out in Style

Seniors Triumph Again

By Mark Leedy

The 39th running of Taylathon capped off the second successful bid for victory by the class of '93. The senior class once again road a penalty free race as they surpassed their closest competitor—the juniors—by a lap and a half.

This year's senior team --Captain Mark Leedy (who didn't ride due to an injury), Kenn McFarland, Jeff Hamilton, Scott Hanback, Greg Flick, Eric Harris, Dave Wehrle and Jeff Woods-- focused on the technical aspects of the difficult race.

The junior team jumped to a quick lead on lap one, but were passed by senior rider Harris following the juniors' crash.

The seniors went on to lead all 64 laps of the race. Attempting to catch them, the junior bid for victory came as close as an eight second differential. But five costly penalties were the deciding factor in the eventual senior rout.

"What a lot of people don't realize is that Taylathon is not a speed race. It's all technical. Our goal was to avoid penalties," said Hamilton. In addition to smooth senior riding, Hamilton's seven double laps proved to give the seniors an edge as they avoided time consuming hand-offs.

Incidentally, the seniors rode 65 laps due to an official miscount. McFarland doubled on laps 64 and 65 to insure official recognition of victory. With hands raised, McFarland sped through the corridor of fans crossing the finish line while giving his teammates high-fives.

Sophomore captain Andy T. Peterson emphasized the importance of Taylor Tradition. "It's excitement and emotion—we're out there pulling our guts out. It's the coolest tradition at any college."

Youth Conference

By Annie Bergsten

Unleash the Power

The smoke rolls across the stage. Colored lights flicker on and off. The driving tempo and beat of "Ashton" by Michael W. Smith gets the crowd clapping.

Youth Conference 1993 is about to happen. This year's Youth Conference challenged kids to "Unleash the Power."

And the weekend was power packed. From the chapel dramas to the working of God in people's lives, power permeated this year's Youth Conference.

Pastor Buster Soaries spoke about allowing God to make the best of an individual. Pastor Soaries came to Upland from his full-time job at the First Baptist Church in Lincoln Gardens in New Jersey.

As he shared his dynamic experiences, the conferees were challenged to go out of their comfort zones and do something with their faith.

Jamie Kenney and John Gabrielson wrote and performed the weekend theme song about unleashing the message of Christ.

The Youth Conference Band was also a key message sender.

The drama, which was based on the Walt Disney movie "Beauty and the Beast," sent a powerful message as the Beast in the story showed students how to share their faith with people in their high schools.

He did this when he shared his own faith experience at his school's prom.

Finally, God's consuming force was evident throughout the weekend by His working in the lives of those in attendance.

Youth Conference Co-director Dawn Deaks said "God's control was evident throughout the weekend.

"It was seen in Taylor students and their willingness to serve and in the 89 students who made decisions for the Lord," she added.

Youth Conference 1993 was in high gear from start to finish. The weekend's message was clear for those who attended.

Now the challenge will be to "Unleash the Power."

(Ed. Note: Annie Bergsten failed to mention that she wrote the entire script for the weekend's skits. Annie was assisted in this monumental task by Bill Cuttino and Kristy Kett.)

A Time of Renewal

By Dorie McDougal

Back to the Basics

As part of the chapel program, a week is set aside for a "Covenant of Renewal" at the beginning of each semester— Spiritual Renewal Week.

The continuing theme of this year's Spring Spiritual Renewal was "Returning Back to the Basics."

In the Fall, Alistair Begg, pastor of the Chapel Solon in Ohio, challenged students to return to the basics of their relationship with God.

"Red hearts, purple moons, green clovers, and blue diamonds..." A native of Scotland, Begg amused the students with introductions such as these.

He also referred to such spiritual giants as the Beatles, Simon and Garfunkel and the Rolling Stones, encouraging students to give God the "brightest and best days of their lives."

In the Spring, Dr. Richard Allan Farmer, president of RAF Ministries, Inc., caught the students' attention with humor and his piano ministry, varying from gospel to jazz.

He described renewal as a "rediscovery of the power of our faith" challenging students to obey God's "outrageous commands."

Campus pastor Chuck Gifford stated "The greatest factor of spiritual renewal is unconditional acceptance of one another as brothers and sisters in Christ .

"If we do that," he added, "Taylor will be a changed place."

All Things To All Men

Chapel Caters to Different Needs

By Dan Turello

For some, chapel is a great time for last-minute study, or a quick snooze between classes.

Chapel also caters to a persistently investigative crowd.

It provides a tangible verification system for consolidating knowledge of current relationships.

Chapels seem to come in all varieties and colors. Some are educational, some are entertaining and some are worshipful.

Why is it so important that busy students and professors gather three times a week in the Rediger Auditorium?

One of the major roles of chapel appears to foster a sense of unity among the faculty, the administration and the student body as well as to remind all that academics, sports, leadership activities and spiritual life are not separate realities.

Ideally there should be no distinctions. All activities pursued at Taylor University are to bring glory to God.

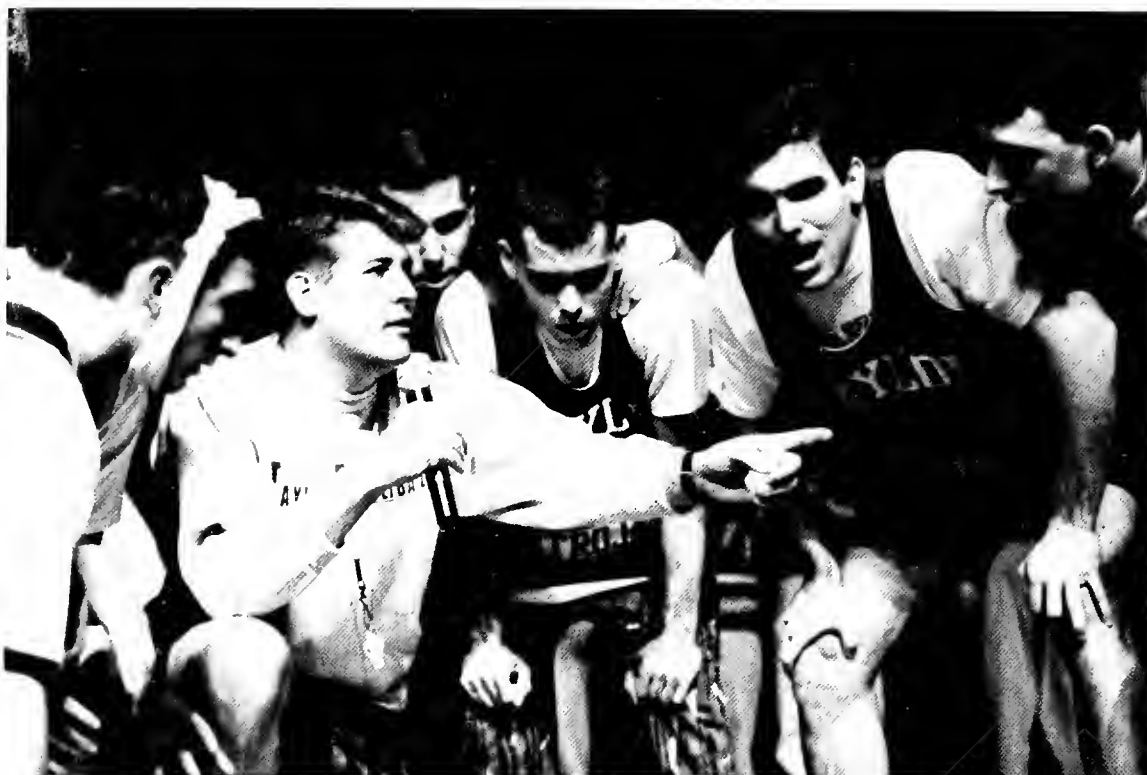

Chapel is a time for the Taylor community to come together to worship. It provides focus and direction, an opportunity to share prayer requests and items of praise.

From Christmas and Easter chapels and Spiritual renewal weeks to Pastor Chuck's "holy kisses" and symbolically oriented dog shows, chapel is a time for reflection and for the refreshment of soul and spirit.

Christmas at Taylor

By Ava Archibald

Like No Other Place

... and then we all get dressed in our pajamas and run over to the dining commons to hear our president read the Christmas Story while we sip eggnog and eat Christmas cookies. You do WHAT?

It's tradition. It wouldn't be Christmas at Taylor without Jay in his red Pajamas reading us the Christmas Story.

When a person gets far too stressed, he or she has to let loose and do something off the wall to avoid having a nervous breakdown.

In the midst of our stress due to living in the realms of Academia, it seems fitting that there would be Jay's Christmas Special.

An annual tradition, the 1992 Christmas Special featured special music by Mike Foote, Shawn Royal, Max Fulwider and others.

To hear Provost Daryl Yost read "Twas the night before Christmas" provides comic relief for listeners young and old.

This year also featured a visit from St. Nicholas (a.k.a. Dr. Leon Adkison). He heard the requests of the professors' kids and responded with all the tact, gentleness and compassion that one would expect from a jolly old computer science professor. The evening also featured performances by Walt Campbell and Professor Tom Jones.

The highlight of the evening, however, is the reading of the Christmas story by President Jay Kesler.

Christmas at Taylor is a very unique and special thing from the Christmas banquet to the special celebration chapel. Christmas offers the experience of family.

At no time is this family atmosphere more evident than when the faculty serves the student body at the Christmas banquet.

The annual celebration chapel, a student favorite, once again lived up to expectations.

This year the familiar tale of Rudolf the red-nosed reindeer was adapted to a more hoosieresque motif.

Steve Mozingo, who wasn't allowed to join in any hoop games, tried to become accepted by Coach Biedebach and the taller members of Taylor's basketball team (Ironically enough, Mozingo led the real Trojans to a district championship. See page 82).

The crowd rejoiced as Mozingo proved his worth and gained the respect of his teammates and the affection of the lovely Clarice.

In a sense, Christmas at Taylor is set up to help students forget about themselves and to laugh and think of others.

This sense of caring is demonstrated by the Christmas tree decorated with names of children. Taylor students are given the chance to give gifts and share joy with these children.

That Nearly Perfect Indiana Day

By Julie Scroggins

And We Were All Together

Remember the dorm, I mean residence hall, at Taylor? Years of community showering, loud quiet hours, the D.C. three times a day and your choices for my pick-a-dates. And then finally off campus—cleaning the bathroom ourselves (or not), remembering to pay the bills, no closed dorm, hanging out, grilling out, plunging toilets, burning candles, opening the screens, going to the real post office and eating rice or cereal for the tenth time in a week. And then graduation—that day that brought us all together to do the one thing we all agreed on as a class.

"A hat that takes work to keep on and creates a forehead ring, a half-of-the-face sunburn, bleacher induced butt numbness all paled in the face of the industrial-sized can of blessing we experienced in getting to know each other."

It went something like that—that graduation card one friend wrote another.

So you've come to this part of the 1992-

93 lium. And you think back to that nearly perfect Indiana afternoon.

Yeah, we all heard Jay tell us not to think that we were extra special in God's eyes—that lots of other seniors had prayed for such perfect weather for graduation too (they just never happened to get it. Hmm.)

And we were all together—for the last time (like that, anyway).

It's months later now—maybe years. You're an alumni, which means you're asked for money.

And you think of that old brand new two-dollar bill Professor Rick Seaman gave each of us at graduation practice. (And how he explained the phenomenon of exponential growth made beautiful through giving to Taylor this way.) That two dollar bill you stuck in the pocket in your wallet that you never use—hoping you'll temporarily forget that it's there—thinking that this way you'll still have it to send when it's time to.

And the towel that Dr. Yost handed us (and did you ever notice that everyone seems to refer to Jay as Jay and Daryl as Dr.

Yost— even Jay?)— some of us framed it.

Some of us did as Jay said, set it on the dresser and pushed it around now and then. Some of them are covered with kitchen stains.

Some are still creased, and some are soft and faded from daily use. These used ones, these are the ones that probably have the most character. Kind of like that old Taylor sweatshirt that you can't imagine ever parting with.

And like some of your friends— the ones who have allowed the Lord to use them daily to build their character. The same guys and girls you lived with, ate with, studied with, worked with, laughed with, cried with, argued with, appreciated, challenged and found yourself challenged by. Some who were so like you— and those who seemed different.

Those who encouraged you and those through whom you learned the value of giving. Friends who you won't see again until we're all Home and the friend you still meet for lunch each week.

And most likely, some of us are still searching for that perfect job that our parents see as worthy of the prefacing $50,000 experience.

Graduation. Yeah, we had perfect weather. We had a final chance to laugh together.

And a chance to cry and mean it. And to learn, perhaps for the first time, what it means to say "farewell," (but never goodbye) to a true friend.

To learn to trust in a new way—to let go.

And to face yesterday's unknown tomorrow that is now today.

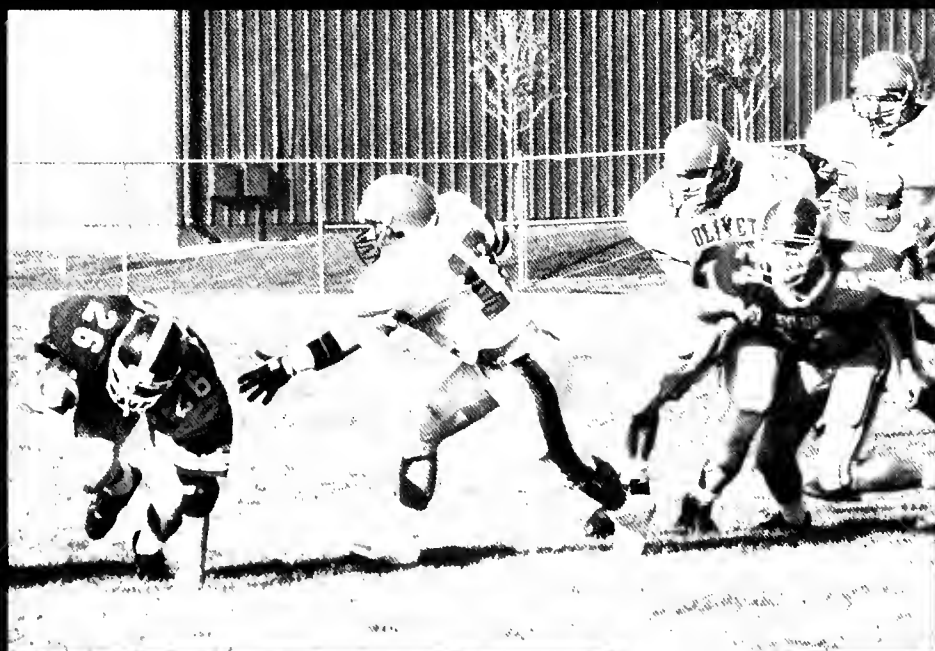

Little did we know so many years ago that our decision to go to Taylor would be the fulfillment of one of God's plans— for you and I to share that season.

For you and I to be friends.

"... the industrial-size can of blessing I've experienced in getting to know you."

I guess that sums it up.

TIMELESS WISDOM?

Jere Truex Shares his View

Unfortunately for the passerby, the quadriplegic so often lurking at the west end of Odle Gymnasium ("the gym") doesn't have anything unique to say, let alone some insight that would retain its value as the Ilium aged.

What confidence could the traditional Hoosier-style basketball fanatic have in a supine spectator who resorted to boldly lettered signs as a toll to attract attention from the basketball officials?

Should one perhaps get fashion advice from a guy with purple and gold shoelaces and a variety of caps geared to make a fashion statement at the best of tractor pulls?

I do know Paul Patterson spoiled men's basketball at Taylor University for the 1990's . . . or, more accurately, Coach Patterson spoiled Taylor University and its men's basketball fans with a consistency of excellence that lets us take his program for granted.

Does that statement constitute historical insight or timeless wisdom? You know it doesn't.

The truth is, I don't have a "special" perspective—I only know what I've been taught. (Doesn't that strike just the right note of ambiguity?)

I'm only a Trojan horse designed not to infiltrate the opponents, but just to distract them.

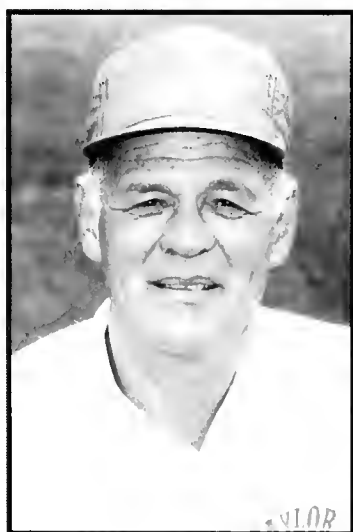

I am really a retired drug dealer who came to Taylor through a government witness relocation program.

Surely you knew I had cocaine in my respirators!

JOHN C. MOSES

At 7:23 AM, on the day before graduation, John C. Moses, the defensive coordinator for Taylor's football team, passed away at Marion General Hospital after suffering a massive heart attack.

Moses came to Taylor from Marion High School, where he served as a guidance counselor until he died.

His life was characterized by activity. After lettering in four sports in college, he participated in the Olympic decathlon trials twice and was drafted by the New York Giants to play football.

Even later in life, Moses remained active: coaching football, working as a guidance counselor, broadcasting football and basketball games on WBAT and still finding time to enjoy a round of golf.

John C. Moses, 56, was a positive influence on those whose lives he touched. His leadership will be missed by fellow coaches and players alike.

BEST YEAR EVER?

Taylor Takes Five District Titles

h, what a year! The 1992-93 athletic year could be considered one of the best ever at Taylor.

Want proof? How about five NAIA District 21 titles, an All-American in football, and Trojan athletes competing in six different NAIA national championship competitions.

The five NAIA District titles won in 1992-93 marked an all-time high for Taylor in women's cross country, women's tennis, soccer, men's basketball and men's track.

The soccer title was the first ever for Taylor, while the men's track championship was the first since 1978.

The only other year Taylor won more than three District crowns was in 1978, when Trojan athletes won titles in men's cross country, men's tennis, golf and men's track. Women did not begin NAIA District competition until 1981.

Out of 14 NAIA District 21 championships awarded, the five won by Taylor were more than any other school.

Grace College was next with three district titles, while Huntington College captured two.

For individual honors, Casey Sparrow became only the fifth player ever to earn All-American honors for the Taylor football program when he was named to the NAIA Division II second team.

The senior wide receiver set Taylor records for receptions and touchdowns, while finishing third in the nation in catches per game.

Also receiving national attention was basketball player Junior Steve Mozingo as an Honorable Mention All-American after leading Taylor in scoring.

From the soccer team, senior Kevin Willis became the first player ever to make the NAIA All-Area team after guiding the Trojans to the District championship. He also was an Honorable Mention All-American.

Teammate Dan Mouw was named to the NAIA All-America Scholar-Athlete squad for his performance in the classroom and on the field.

Earning National Christian College Athletic Association (NCCAA) All-American awards were Naomi Moore, Amy Sims, Steve Stringfellow and Joel Hamilton in cross country. Naomi Moore also made the NCCAA All-American team in track, as did Amy Boothe and Susan Dodson.

Besides their great performances in the district, Trojan athletes also did well at the national level. Even after placing second in the district, the men's cross country team ran to a 17th place finish at the NAIA national meet.

The women's cross country team had their best national finish ever as they came in 20th.

The men's basketball team was rated in the NAIA Division I top-25 all season and entered the national tournament seeded No. 16. It was the seventh national appearance in the past 10 years for the Trojans.

This time they fell in overtime in the first round to the No. 15 seed, Salem-Teikyo (W.V.).

Both the men's and women's track team had one competitor compete in the national meet. Senior Naomi Moore ran the 3,000 meters and sophomore Tony Newman threw the discus at national meet held in British Columbia, Canada.

By virtue of winning their district title, the women's tennis team played in the NAIA national tournament in Kansas City for the second straight year.

It is quite easy to see that 1992-93 was a banner year for Taylor University All-District performers, not only point to the quality of student athletes at Taylor, but also to the quality and dedication of the coaching staff.

Can the 1993-94 year hope to match the season just completed? For the coaches, there are only three short months to enjoy past successes before looking to the new year ahead.

Soccer Team Captures First Ever District Crown

A Place To Play
Soccer
Taylor Athletics

I could not breathe. Celebrating a return to the district finals, my jubilant teammates piled on me. After nearly two and a half hours, the struggle against Huntington College was over and the Trojans had won. The 1992 soccer season was a season of triumph and tragedy.

The regular season saw a squad that played like two different teams. At home, the Trojans were 5-1-2, while playing some of their best soccer. On the road, however, things often took a turn for the worse. After an opening win at Anderson, the team only managed to pull off one other road win.

It is the playoffs that this year's team will remember. The march to the District title was led by a sophomore forward from the deep south who heats up, when the weather gets cold. Andy Harbour had 5 goals and 2 assists in playoff action.

During the season, All-District senior Kevin Willis led the Trojan scoring attack with 8 goals including a halftime buzzer beater from 40 yards out against rival Grace College. Fellow All-District performer Sean "Tricky" Vaughan molded a group of former midfielders into a cohesive defensive unit.

Playing every minute of the season and registering 6 shutouts, freshman goalie Toby Bohl led a talented group of newcomers to this year's team.

The goal of this year's team was to win Taylor soccer's first District championship. With a 5-1 victory over Indiana Wesleyan, that goal was accomplished. Coach Lund loses only two seniors from this team as he seeks Taylor soccer's second district championship.

THE SAGA OF TAYLOR VOLLEYBALL

Flowered Buns, Altered Rules, and a Missing Atlas

A Place To Play.
Volleyball
Taylor Athletics

Despite operating the entire season without consuming any sugar, the volleyball team persevered to a 32-11 record. The season was quite different this year, but the team still managed to make many memories of both the high-lights and the low lights.

The 1992 team was definitely moving, but with coach Cox driving, they were exactly sure where. A new coach meant many questions ("Coach—What about an atlas?"), and occasionally—OK often—the team found itself hurtling down the highway as fast as those big blue vans can motor to make up for lost time (operative word—LOST).

Practices were also different and flowered buns on a certain tall blonde provided just the break the team needed from the stress of "what in the world?" A favorite practice was a secret jumping exercise at Tiffin University which broke a hotel bed.

How much fast food can one get for four dollars? The men's basketball team may not be able to tell you, but the volleyball girls are pros. This involuntary rationing simply added to the dietary experimentation dictated by coach. The team soon learned that appetites could be curbed by the secret consumption of cookies on particularly long road trips.

Unlike previous seasons, even games had a distinct adventurous quality. After losing half the starters and the three-time NCCAA national coach of the year, adjustment was a key word. Co-captains Kristine Dyck and Anne Lee can sum up the season by stating "You just can't change the rules."

(ed note: The volleyball team actually did play volleyball this year. They were led on and off the floor by co-captains Kristine Dyck and Anne Lee, who were both named All-District performers.)

Although they were not allowed to defend their NCCAA National Championship, the team won three tournament titles and placed second in two others. To the author of the story, these were mere diversions on the long and winding road which Taylor volleyball travelled.)

ALASKAN PIPELINE FLOWS

Northern Imports Fuel Men's Cross Country

With less than half of the 1991 team returning, it would have appeared that the Men's Cross Country team was in for one of those "rebuilding years." Four of the seven varsity runners were back for the 1992 season, but there remained some very large shoes to fill. Fortunately for the Jarheads and to the dismay of their opponents, these shoes were more than just filled.

1992 was the year of the "Alaskan pipeline." With the arrival of junior transfer Stephen Stringfellow, the Alaskan trio of Stringfellow, junior Joel Hamilton, and senior James Embree proved to be a potent force. The Alaskans claimed the top three places for much of the season and many top ten finishes as well.

1992 was also the year of the freshmen. With many sporting unique haircuts, the freshmen were led by Phil Steiner who, a first time Jarhead, turned out an impressive season. Brad Jones, Rob Malmquist and Michael Hollar also had good runs, consistently filling the 7-9 spots, ensuring success for years to come.

Overall, the team had an excellent season, displaying outstanding depth and mix. The top ten were very strong, often finishing ahead of the number five and six runners of competing teams. The even mix came from the fact that of the nine runners who finished in the top seven, there were two seniors, two juniors, two sophomores, and three freshman. This depth and mix proved successful, as the Jarheads went on to take three team titles, two seconds, and a 17th place finish at the NAIA Nationals, ending the season 75-18 (81%).

In light of this success, Coach Coy has an even brighter future mapped out, with talk of a top five spot at Nationals for the 1993 season. No one knows quite how far the Jarheads might go—only that it will be far.

A PACK OF "MADDAWGS"

Lady Trojans Find Strength in Team Effort

*This is the law of the jungle and the law reads forward and back
The strength of the pack is the wolf and the strength of the wolf is the pack.*

- Rudyard Kipling

Most people think cross country is the epitome of Teddy Roosevelt's spirit of rugged individualism. The 1993 Taylor women's cross country team would argue the contrary. They would argue that Cross is the ultimate team sport. The "maddawgs" ran their way to the district championship and a chance to compete at the NAIA national meet in Kenosha, Wisconsin.

This was a substantial feat, since, as senior Naomi Moore states "Individuals had gone to Nationals before, but this was the first time I have ever gone with a team." Senior Captain Amy Sims adds "There was a tremendous sense of team unity at Nationals, ... the girls who went as alternates were such an encouragement."

The sense of team unity was built by Coach Bullock, who, according to Junior Sara Smearsoll, prides himself on being the only male at Taylor who is chased around campus daily by a dozen women. The camaraderie which developed in practices led to a team that ran well together.

Moore thought this year's squad was interesting because, "You never knew what order people would finish." Sims felt this competitiveness was good for the unity of the team as well. She says "No one was exceptionally fast or slow, so we could run as a group in practice and enjoy the fellowship."

When asked about the name "maddawgs," the team was unable to present a believable epistemology, but they do relish the idea of being a team. All of the runners enjoyed the encouragement that the team offered, and as a team they were successful.

The season had many high expectations, and the women's cross country team fulfilled them. While many of the runners were disappointed by their placings in the muddy and crowded conditions at nationals, the "maddawgs" got a chance to run as a team - and the team is more important than the individual.

THE BEST AND THE WORST

Taylor Football Touches Down at Home

A Place To Play
Taylor Athletics

It was the best of times. it was the worst of times. This Dickens quote aptly describes the 1992 season for the Taylor football team. Despite a disappointing 2-7-1 record, there were several highlights during the campaign.

- After an 0-4-1 start, the Trojans won in the most unlikely of games, knocking rival DePauw for the first time in school history, 24-21, on Homecoming Weekend.

- The Trojans came back the next Saturday, during Parent's Weekend, to defeat Franklin 34-33 for their second win in a row.

In addition to these team highlights, several players achieved personal successes.

Senior wide receiver Casey Sparrow was named NAIA All-American after leading the NAIA in catches per game for nearly the entire season.

Freshman quarterback sensation Kenny Locke broke seven school records including most yards in a game (367), most completions in a game (29), most attempts in a game (55), most yards in a season (2,821) and most touchdowns in a season (21).

The high-fiving and celebrating was tested, though, by the other side of the Trojan's season which brought them some setbacks.

- In their first home game, Taylor blew a 31-7 half-time lead as Olivet made the two-point conversion and stunned the Trojans in a 31-31 tie. The Trojans proceeded to drop their next three games.

- Taylor's defense, forced to use several inexperienced newcomers, showed its greenness, holding an opponent under 30 points all season only once.

"We knew it would be a struggle," Carlson said. "Our young guys have to learn what it takes to win. But beating DePauw, I think, showed our team has a lot of potential."

"It was discouraging at certain times," said senior offensive lineman Aaron Norris.

"You're giving it everything you've got, but things aren't coming together. But when they did, like against DePauw, it makes you forget about the beginning of the season."

WOMEN NET DISTRICT TITLE

Despite Lack of Experience, Taylor Triumphs Again

It seemed impossible to top last season's record, but the 1992 women's tennis team certainly came close. With only two of 1991's top six players returning, and five freshmen coming on board, the team began in a spirit of apprehension. But this spirit was short-lived. The freshmen quickly proved themselves, showing spunk and a desire to win.

Freshman Beth "Attitude" Prior and Jennifer "Lactic" Arnold filled the #1 and #2 singles spots respectively. Prior and senior Lisa Gallagher made up the #1 doubles team and Arnold and junior Dana Steckely the #2 doubles.

The Lady Trojan's season record of 8-4 carried them into the District 21 tournament as defending district champs. The team went into the tournament not expecting to win, but committed to playing their hardest for the Lord.

Ranking third throughout the tournament, the women continued to persevere, slowly moving up in their flights.

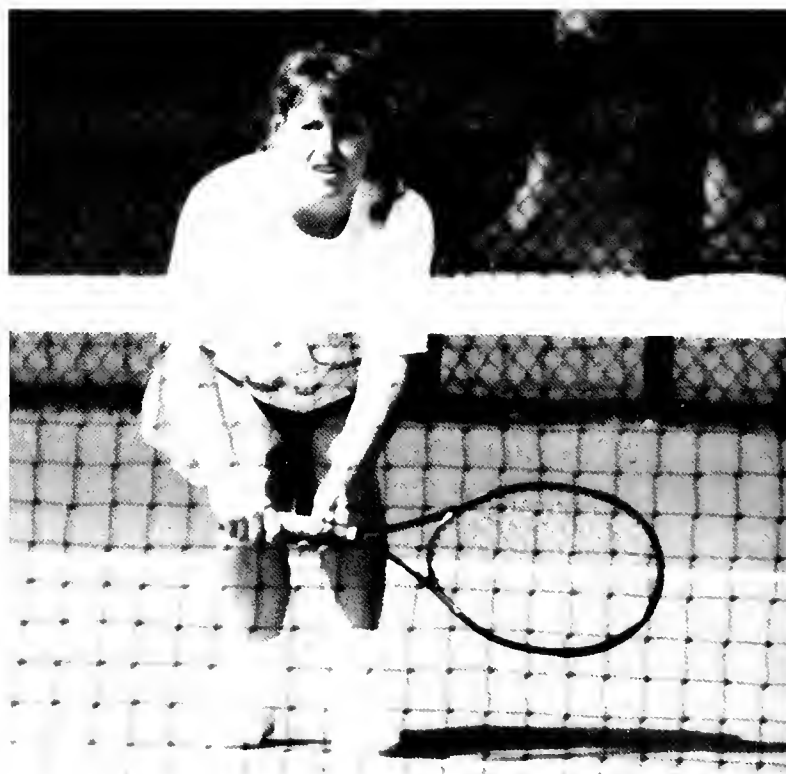

Critical wins late in the tournament by Liz Diakoff at #5 singles and Prior and Gallagher at #1 doubles placed the Lady Trojans in a tied position for first place. By defeating IUPUI in the final match of the tournament, the Taylor women's tennis team again became District 21 champions.

The season that started with apprehension ended with exuberation. The enduring team effort was led by co-MVP's Prior and Steckely. Team members agreed that their strength came from the faith they shared.

SO HAPPY TOGETHER

Youthful Team Builds Relationships

Being a member of an athletic team at Taylor goes beyond strengthening physical wellness. In fact, the aspect of building relationships is often central. Taylor's 1992 men's tennis team has displayed this throughout the season.

This team was the youngest Taylor has had in five years. Four of the eight varsity players were newcomers including Jonathan Dahl, Matt Tumas, Matt Wanner and sophomore transfer Jake Jelinek. Each brought new strengths, skill and spirit to the team. The returning players were sophomores Mark Reed and Joel Beardsley and seniors Joel Harms and Matthew Snell.

The Trojan's season record was 5-5-1. Although a numerically balanced record, three of the five wins were shut-outs and some losses extremely close. Maintaining a strong focus on the relationships built through the team's experience, the season record was the perfect record.

Jake Jelinek said, "The upper-classmen made it easy for the newcomers to feel a part of the team." Jonathan Dahl stated "I really felt a camaraderie with the whole team."

As a fourth year team member, I felt this was the closest group so far. Hard work is always profitable when relationships centered on Christ are built— even hard work playing tennis.

A SEAT WITH A VIEW

Senior Holly Gaff Watches a Rebuilding Year

A Place To Play.
Basketball
Taylor Athletics

Why would anyone in her right mind join the basketball team their senior year knowing full well that she would not get much, if any, playing time?

That question ran through my mind a lot at the beginning of the season, especially when I was so sore I didn't think I could move. As I adjusted to living, eating and breathing basketball, I began to see how much God could teach me and the rest of the team through the game.

The lady Trojans had a base of only three returning players and was completed by eight freshman, one transfer and myself. It is easy to count the number of underclassmen, but as the season progressed, it became evident that the team was an overall "young" team. Yet, if you had come to a game at the beginning of the season and then at the end, you would have a hard time believing that it was the same squad. The improvement was incredible.

One game that especially sticks in my mind is the second game against Indiana Wesleyan. We had played them in the very beginning of the season and lost by a lot. Going into the second game we were determined to beat them. Remaining strong throughout, we tied up the game and went into overtime — and lost by two points. Games like that were hard to take, but they verified how far we had come.

A losing season is never easy, but I think the lessons learned will make the team much stronger in upcoming years. As they mature, the Lady Trojans basketball team will be a show that Taylor fans will not want to miss.

DISTRICT 21 CHAMPIONS

The Taylor Winning Tradition Continues

Seniors Marty Beasley and Micah Newhouse led the Taylor men's basketball team to another terrific season, finishing with a record of 27-7.

The season included several high points, including a third straight District 21 championship over the visiting IUPUI Metros 92-73, qualifying them for yet another trip to Kansas City.

The Trojans came away winners in three of the five tournaments they played in at Earlham, Indiana Wesleyan and the Ivanhoe Classic.

Struggling mid-way through the season, the Trojans suffered some disappointing losses, dropping games to Keuka (NY), DePauw and Tri-State (all on the road). However, the Trojans stayed focused and finished the season in a fury.

The highlight of the regular season was the road trip to Malone in Ohio. Playing in front of a hostile crowd, the Trojans pulled together as a team and hung on to defeat

Malone, giving the purple and gold a little momentum heading into the district play-offs.

After defeating Purdue-Calumet in the opening round of the district tournament, the Trojans went on to face the challenging squad of IUPUI in the finals.

Exiting the court with a tied halftime score of 31-31, the visitors faced the Trojans for the deciding second half. A balance of determination, strong leadership and a great work ethic carried the Trojans to their seventh District 21 championship under head coach Paul Patterson.

Although the season ended abruptly in Kansas City, the Trojans had nothing to be ashamed of. Leading the nation in defense for the first time was a great source of Trojan pride. Combine that with 27 wins, another District 21 Championship and a birth in the last NAIA National Tournament in Kansas City and it is clear that the TU winning tradition lives on!

A YEAR TO REMEMBER

Baseball With an Attitude

Our season might not have gone as well as we had planned, but we had fun. Solid black spikes and purple low-riders were in full effect.

Attitudes? Yeah, we had attitudes, starting with the freshmen and ending very expressively with the seniors.

We were a mixture of different backgrounds thrown together by the impossible craziness of baseball and it was this crazy love for America's game that brought us together every day, whether we wanted to see each other or not.

Classes? What classes?

The season had its ups and downs. We had our trips down the line, our quiet chats on the bench and our constant heckling of the umpires, the other team and anyone else who would listen.

Uniqueness? Our team was overflowing with it. We displayed earrings (seven to be exact), shaved heads and facial hair that varied from day to day. High-tops or low-tops? Shoe style did not matter as long as they were black and ugly.

What color uniforms do we wear? Who cares! Baseball isn't a fashion statement; it's a love. To play baseball you have to love and hate the game and everything that comes with it.

Fans? What fans?

We all love the game and that's what brought us together as a team. We did not, however, lose our individual characteristics in the process.

Punching dugouts, getting kicked out of games, mood swings and arguments seemed to be common occurrences.

We overcame these setbacks, took some Advil and went on with the season.

In the end, we all contributed our little bit to one team and went on with our lives. Baseball brought us together, tested our patience and our ability to deal with each other.

Most of all, baseball gave us memories we will never forget...no matter how hard we try.

(Ed. Note: In order to preserve the journalistic integrity of this volume, it is necessary to include on this page a listing of some pertinent facts about the baseball team.)

The team was led at the plate by All-District performer John Koslosky, who hit .390 with 5 homers and 35 RBI's. Tim Winterholter was also selected to the All-District team for his outstanding performance at second base.

The pitching staff was led by reliever Gary Ross who won all three of his decisions and accumulated four saves. Ross faced 57 batters and allowed only five hits and two earned runs. Mark Laing also went 3-0 while splitting time between the mound and shortstop.)

A WINNING RECORD

New Coach Offers New Start

Change. It's been a buzz word since the November election, but Coach Angie Cox and the softball team took the term to heart and turned around a struggling softball program. "The girls were really enthusiastic about getting a new coach and we were all excited about changing the image of our softball team," Cox said.

"Last year, the girls finished the season at 7-13. But at our meeting before the season started, we decided we wanted to win 75% of our games. We may not have reached that goal, but we put together a 21-13 season and finished fourth in the District."

This year's team was committed to hard work and even though they didn't break any school records, Cox is excited about the future. "We went into the District tournament seeded fourth, and we won our first tournament game, defeating Huntington, 7-4," she said. "We set the pace for this year, and now we have a base to build with."

Three freshmen helped to build this strong base. Melodie Ringenberg finished the season with an 11-8 record, pitching in 25 of the Lady Trojans 31 games and holding her 2.75 ERA as the team low. Ringenberg also led the team in runs scored (35) and drew 23 walks.

Beth Gortner, the team MVP, led the team in batting average, hitting .458, including seven doubles which tied her for the team lead. Amy Schreck led the team in RBI's (37), triples (4), homeruns (7), and total bases (67).

"This season has allowed us to start up next year right where we left off," Cox said. "We will be a lot more confident in our abilities and I think we'll be contenders for the district title."

DISTRICT 21 CHAMPIONS

Fifteen Years in the Making

In 1978 Jimmy Carter was the President of the United States and Taylor University's men's track and field team won a District Championship.

Fifteen years later, another Democrat came into office and the Taylor's men's Track and field team was again victorious at the district meet.

Trailing by 6 points with only the 5,000 meter run and the mile relay to go, Taylor's six entries in the 5,000 all finished in front of the first Huntington competitor to seal Taylor's first Track and Field Championship since 1978.

Before the meet, the team knew the meet was going to be decided by the thirds, fourths, fifths and sixths, and it was.

In the 18 non-relay events, there were 72 of these places to be taken and we took 38.

We also depended on points from the field. Tony Newman led a group of first and second year weightmen. Newman broke the school record in the hammer throw and finished eighth at the NAIA National Meet.

Jib Baker, John Lugaur and Vince Diller all finished among the top ten all-time Taylor javelin throwers.

In the shorter events, Taylor's depth was also evident. Mark Hertzler won the 110 meter hurdles and placed in the 400 meter hurdles at the district meet.

Doug Bonura, Chris Adkison, Jib Baker, Jay Loudermilk and Kirk Nieveen all scored points in the relays and as individuals.

Mark Mays always provided excitement with his come from behind finishes in the 800 and the 4X400 meter relay. Mays also moved up on Taylor's top ten list in the 800 running a 1:56 at Christian Nationals.

The team would not have had the success that it did, though, without the excellent coaching staff. They set out to win a district title, and the coaches positioned them to do it.

First year head coach Chris Coy was assisted greatly by his specialty coaches.

Because teammates decided that they would sacrifice individual glory to win a district championship for the team, there is a "'93" next to the "'78" on the big state of Indiana in Don Odle Gymnasium.

As this year's team loses only a handful of seniors, one can expect to see more numbers painted in years to come.

RUNNING STRONG

A View From the Track

This is the third and final call for the men's and women's 10,000 meter run. All runners must report immediately to the starting line."

As I hear my race announced one last time, I frantically shed all my extra layers of clothes and meet my competitors at the starting line. The cutting Indiana wind sweeps across the track as we nervously exchange glances.

"Ladies and gentlemen, you will be circling the track twenty-five times to complete the race...take your mark." And with a resounding bang, the race begins.

By my fifth lap, I am into the rhythm of the race, and my mind is able to wander a little.

"This is the first call for the women's 4X100 relay."

On an outside lane, Amy Boothe takes the baton from freshman sensation Susan Dotson and flies past me. They are warming up for what should be another exciting relay. It would be nice to be that fast, but I need to get back to the business at hand. Coach Coy is down at the end of the straightaway yelling for me to pick up the pace. I wonder when he last ran a competitive 10K.

"This is the third and final call for women's discus and long jump."

I cross the three mile mark with a pretty good time going, but the race is only half way through. Sara Smearsoll is getting her steps down for the long jump, and is about to start another busy day. I cannot believe how much energy she has. Carole Bulton, Holly Gaff, Katie Schaeffer and Mari Howard are warming up to challenge the dreaded Huntington discus throwers. It would be great if they could score some points for us.

In the middle of the track, my roommate Natalie Stanislaw is warming up for the Javelin. She will definately do well today, but I wonder how she will do when she competes in the heptathalon.

Five miles down and five laps to go; the heat is starting to take its toll. I grab a glass of water from a helpful track assistant and focus my eyes down the track toward the leader. Amy Sims has just made her move and is putting distance between herself and the second place runner. I am in third, but I need to hold my pace.

"This is the last call for the women's 4X100 meter relay and first call for the women's 5,000 meter run."

The guys have all finished, and the track is much less crowded. The gun sounds and Amy has only one lap to go. Maddawgs Naomi Moore, Amy Stone and Rachel Bossley jog by the opposite way while warming up for the 5,000. They all stop and yell nice things which I can barely comprehend. I finish mile six and have only one lap to go. My legs feel like jello, but if I can run a good last lap, I will hold on to third place.

The yells from the crowd as I round the last turn make me dig a little deeper and sprint (as best I can after six miles) toward the finish line. I finish with my best time, which, considering the heat, is really surprising. I want to lay down and rest, but trainer Andy Gogle tells me to keep walking. I do, and after a while I feel better.

Having finished my race, I can be out in the sun watching my teammates run, jump and throw. I hope the rest of the meet goes as well as the ten thousand did.

FULL OF HEART

Golf Team Steadily Improves

The 1993 Taylor University golf team was very successful on and off the course as they continued the winning tradition of Taylor athletics.

The word that would characterize this team is "heart." The team never gave up, pressing on toward the goals they had set for themselves.

Beginning with the first match of the year, all the way to the district tournament, the team lowered its scores on a consistent basis. Not only did the team display heart in the area of scoring, but maintained a level of integrity and sportsmanship that was respected among the competition.

The team was also tightly knit together as a result of the friendships that were made throughout the season.

"I wouldn't trade this bunch of guys for any other team we compete against," said Coach Joe Romine.

Character, heart and never giving up in the face of competition; that's what Taylor University's 1993 golf team was all about.

MEN'S VOLLEYBALL HAS ARRIVED

Equipment, Respect, and a Schedule

In just its second official year, the men's volleyball club has made plenty of progress after its initial struggles.

Gone are the days of 6 a.m. practices (with poles and tennis net from the middle court in intramurals). Gone are the days of getting approval and respect from other clubs, athletes and faculty at Taylor.

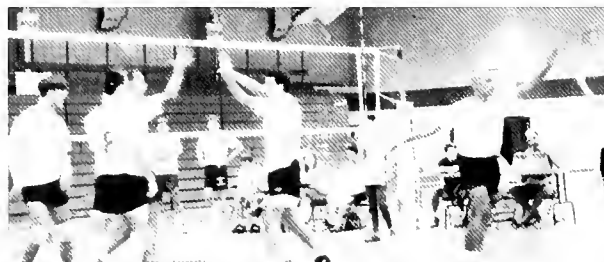

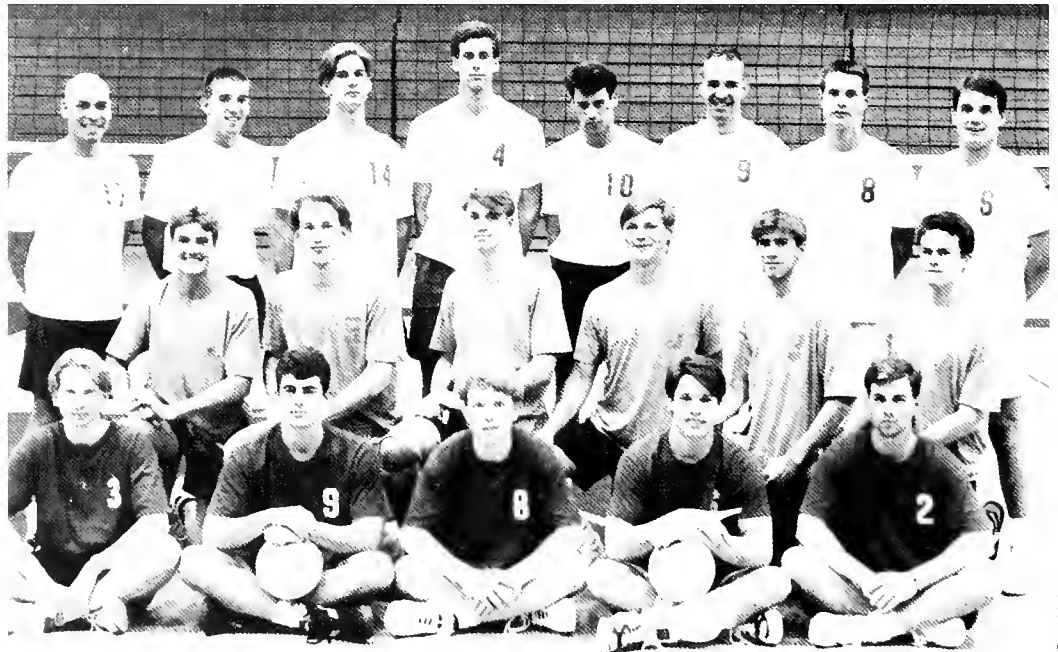

Gone are the days of recruiting the male students of Taylor to try this new club.

Here are the days of full fledged club with their own equipment and schedule. Here are the days where the club is able to field two teams for the whole year. (Ed. Note: Here are the days where the club is in the sports section of yearbook as opposed to the organizational section.)

A lot of work has been done since this club first tried to get off the ground in the mid-80's. Graduating seniors Phil Nicewonger, Steve Stalcup and Rob Zimmerman are soon to be gone after graduation, talented freshman Doug Crane, John Keck, Aaron McKinney and Matt Tumas will seek to continue to improve a young and serious organization.

EQUESTRIAN

Of or Pertaining to Horses

Look around. If you're observant, maybe sometime you'll see a woman (or Doug Hardesty, who kept the team coed) walking bowlegged through campus wearing tall leather boots, tight spandex breeches and an old T-shirt while looking rather fatigued.

This is an equestrian who is coming back from a lesson which prepared them for one of five shows held by the Intercollegiate Horse Show Association during the course of the year.

The requirement of sitting on a newly-met horse each show— even after hours of practice— is exhilarating, terrifying and possibly suicidal— all at once.

With ten beginning riders, the equestrian team experienced a building year: road trips, lessons, Motel 6 adventures, Ponderosa feasts, Coach T.J. LeBlanc's embarrassing and hilarious antics, schooling during shows, the end of the year banquet, and taking care of our horses— were the materials by which our "building year" was constructed.

Also, 6 a.m. practices with various (critical) parts of the saddle previously removed by T.J. tested our perseverance and strengthened our inner thighs. Besides feeling as comfortable atop a 16-hand quarter-horse as we do walking, the 1992-93 Equestrian team has built a solid base of experience, friendship and unity of purpose within the team.

With sixteen returning members, we will be a force to contend with.

Presidential Partnership

Jay and Janie Kesler

Perhaps . . . it's spring-time and you're jogging around the loop at 6:30 a.m. You come upon a familiar couple starting their day with a brisk walk— smiling and greeting you most likely by name (even though you are one of 1,800 students at Taylor).

As you continue your early morning agony, you reflect on the faces you just encountered. You wonder, how do they do it? They seem so full of life and so together and almost excited— but you know they must be swamped by a schedule that attempts to cram 26 hours into a 24-hour day. A schedule that demands far more energy than your rapidly withering 20-year-old body could ever imagine exerting— especially as you sweat out the last straight stretch of the loop and turn into the haven of Swallow Robin (his dorm years earlier).

Throughout the week (your last as a student at Taylor) you find that brief early morning meeting entering your thoughts. Although they live in the President's house (as opposed to your wing), and although you'll never share the bonding that goes on in the community bathroom, this couple has etched their way into your mind and into your heart.

The following Saturday afternoon, as you shake hands with this same man (and he says one more time, "Call me Jay") as you receive your diploma, you detect a certain excitement in his eye. You know he and his wife are genuinely sad to see you go, but .

After the ceremony is complete and caps have flown and mortarboards decorate Wheeler Memorial Stadium, you notice this young couple (uh, the Keslers, for those of you who still haven't caught on) edging their way towards the parking lot.

No one seems to notice because they often stop along the way to say final good-byes to seniors that they have come to know as friends.

Still, they wade through the laughing, smiling, teary crowds as friends turn to friends and family members locate one another.

And the Kesler's have reached their car— they are in— they are out of the parking lot and headed home.

Then the flurry begins: the graduation clothes are suddenly grubbies and Jay looks to his Taylor sweetheart with a big grin, exclaiming "Janie, we'll be in the car and headed for the cabin before all the students are gone . . ."

Janie finishes his sentence "And don't we feel young again?"

Janie loves to sit on the deck of a boat in the warm sunshine with a good book. Luckily Jay was able to find an activity to compliment this— fishing.

The Kesler's life and Taylor University are nearly synonymous. Yet, they manage, oh, three meals alone together each year.

They have, out of necessity, developed the art of making time to call their own. In other words, there is another side to Janie, the President's wife and to Jay, the President of Taylor University.

"We live our life together; we do everything together. When we came to Taylor, one of the things I stressed with the Taylor board was that Janie would travel with me."

After 28 years with Youth for Christ which took Dr. Jay Kesler around the world alone for more than half of each year, the Keslers now spend the majority of their time together.

Though Janie doesn't have a formal contract, as Jay says "It is a co-Presidency." (The funding for Mrs. Kesler's travel comes from the proceeds of Dr. Kesler's radio show and any other talks or publications he is paid for.)

Besides being the President of Taylor University, former President of Youth For Christ, radio show host, author and friend to literally thousands of students . . . and besides being the wife of the aforementioned as well as the beautiful First Lady of Taylor University who radiates a gentle and humble spirit . . .

Who is this pair?

His father a cabinet maker; Jay followed suit. He began building Early American style furniture for his and Janie's home when they were first married.

Dr. Kesler remains a carpenter today. He makes gifts in his workshop that are of authentic materials— not store-bought synthetics. His carpentry has expanded to the building of the Kesler's cottage in southern Indiana, their get-away which they have been working on for five years.

Janie calls herself "Jay's assistant" as she paints and stains and decorates, commenting "That's really been the fun thing for us, doing it together and creating something together."

Both Dr. and Mrs. Kesler enjoy reading. Mrs. Kesler loves Russian novels— especially Tolstoy. She also enjoys Potok and a long list of others.

Dr. Kesler says that he has been greatly influenced by C. S. Lewis, adding "We try to read together because this keeps us together— so we are thinking the same thoughts."

Janie loves to sit on the deck of a boat in the warm sunshine with a good book. Luckily, Jay was able to find an activity to compliment this— fishing. He manages a trip to Canada nearly every year for walleye fishing.

Locally, he waits patiently for bass and, when possible, engages in fly-fishing. Jay says, "Fishing has really become a friend-raising thing."

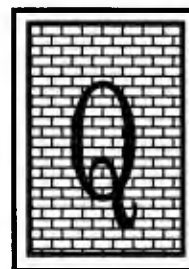

The Kesler's start their day at 6 a.m. with coffee and devotions (yes, even Jay and Janie have to pray!) and then off they go for a brisk walk at 6:30. If they could choose a different place to wake up to they might choose the Swiss Alps or Scotland or England.

For now, they choose Upland, Indiana and Taylor University. And when the grandkids are in town, Ivanhoe's.

How can Taylor's general education curriculum continue to improve?

I believe that general education at Taylor could more nearly approach the curricular centrality we say it has by simply putting it in the spotlight.

Here are some ways that I think we can put the general education curriculum in the spotlight:

- 1.) Devote one chapel per month to a convocation tied directly to a particular general education class.
- 2.) Have every senior prepare an integrative thesis growing out of his/her general education experience—complete with adjudication, prizes and public readings.
- 3.) Use a standardized pre- and post-test procedure to ascertain the effectiveness of the program.
- 4.) Provide more topical and interdisciplinary classes modeled on the Honors curriculum.
- 5.) In general, make the connections between all the classes in the general education curriculum clearer to students and faculty.

A Man for All Seasons

Professor Jones: A Distinguished Professor

Henry Ford once said, "History is bunk," but Professor Tom Jones refuses to accept that explanation.

To Jones, the 1992-1993 distinguished professor of the year, history is a living, changing organism with which scholars must wrestle.

He believes wholeheartedly that knowledge of history is necessary to understand the present, and the lessons of history can equip students to better deal with the present.

Because he strongly believes that the study of history is both necessary and applicable, his classrooms are never a dull place.

Never one to shy away from controversy, Jones welcomes it. He expects his students to look at history with a critical eye.

History is more than a list of dates to be memorized. His students know they need to come to his class prepared.

As a graduate of Taylor University, Professor Jones has learned to incorporate both faith and learning in both the classroom and in his lifestyle.

He is forever challenging his students to develop a Christian world view and to understand history in the context of that world view.

Joe Foote, TSO president, history major and Professor Jones imitator, describes Jones' application of faith and learning when he says "Professor Jones is the personification of integration of faith and learning. His constant contributions extend far beyond the classroom into the hearts and spirits of the students fortunate enough to study under him. To have a class with Professor Jones is to never be the same again. I think I will name my first born son after him."

Jones does not limit his integration of faith and learning to the Taylor classroom. He also serves as the pastor at a local church.

Besides the obvious commitment of working in two professions, he also works full time as a husband and father. He has two children, Stephan and Bethany.

To know professor Jones, it is neces-

"Professor Jones is the personification of the integration of faith and learning...To have a class with Professor Jones is to never be the same again. I think I will name my first born son after him."

-Joe Foote-

sary to know a little of his history. Jones graduated from Fairmount High School and traveled a few miles down the road to Taylor University.

While at Taylor, he remembers taking academic direction from a young and vibrant Dr. Dwight Mikkleson. This relationship has turned out to be a long lasting one, as Jones now has an office right next to his mentor's.

Unlike most professors, Jones teaches in more than one department.

He draws upon the knowledge he gained as a high school administrator at Oak Hill High School as he teaches a methods course and supervises student teachers for the education department.

After graduating from Taylor, Jones continued his education at Notre Dame. Jones, still a fan of the Fighting Irish, often wears a Notre Dame tie and occasionally Notre Dame suspenders to class on Fridays when the Irish are preparing for a big game. He has continued to study and is currently working on his doctorate.

Classroom teaching, pulpit preaching, post graduate learning and fatherhood are all roles which professor Jones fills.

He does more than fill those roles; he excels at them.

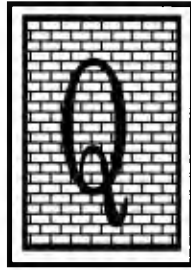

Even more amazing, he never seems to busy to offer a word of encouragement, write a recommendation or suggest a book.

The distinguished professor of the year for 1992-93, Asst. Professor Tom Jones is indeed a man for all seasons.

What makes Taylor University an attractive place to teach?

I believe the attraction of teaching at Taylor falls into two categories for me.

1) Academically: I have found it very satisfying to pass on my knowledge to students who have a desire to learn. Watching students as they grasp the information, fold it into their own lives and then go on to use it in their future lives and occupations gives me a sense of purpose. The quality of our students is second to no one.

2) Institutionally: I enjoy coming back to my Alma Mater and being able to be a part of a "Christian" environment. You realize how special this is when you've worked in the secular arena.

The contact with students and fellow teachers/ administrators is enjoyable and uplifting. It also provides an excellent atmosphere in which to raise my four children.

Russian Professor Enjoys Teaching in America's Heartland

This semester (Spring '93) many of us at Taylor have come to know and love Dr. Bella Gribkova. She came to us in February from Nizhni Novgorod to spend a semester away from her home and husband to help students at Taylor gain an understanding of Russia's rich culture and language. Nizhni Novgorod is Russia's third populated city of 3.7 million people. Though it is situated only 250 miles east of Moscow, it has long been a progressive center in economics as the testing grounds for the privatization of the former Soviet Union.

However, according to Pavlovna, the most precious of Nizhni Novgorod's treasures is the Volga River, along whose banks she loves to stroll or just sit and watch the sun go down.

In 1974 Gribkova graduated with an MA equivalent in English from Nizhni Novgorod State University. She started teaching English at the celebrated Nizhni Novgorod Conservatory where she met and married her husband.

In 1976, Pavlovna returned to teach English at Nizhni Novgorod State University. In 1986, she received her doctorate from Odessa State University in spoken English.

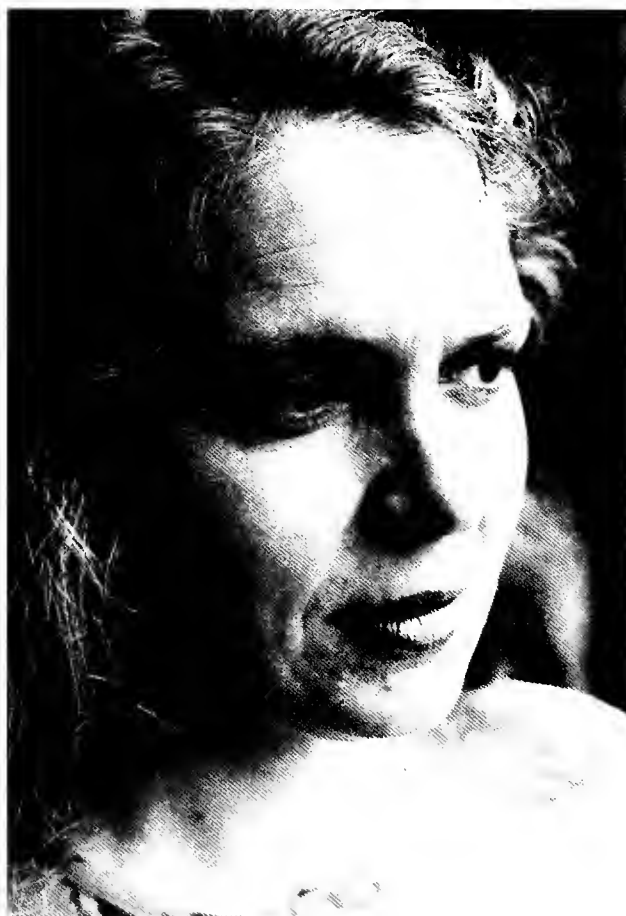

Meanwhile, in 1980, Bella Pavlovna had established a seemingly harmless organization which would change her life, an English club.

Her progressive method of teaching English through an understanding of culture led her to explore and introduce to her pupils the Christmas traditions of Great Britain and America.

During this time in her life, Pavlovna began to reflect on the Jesus her believing grandmother had lived for and told her about.

She found this Jesus in the culture of her homeland, in the works of Dostoyevski and especially in Tolstoy's Resurrection. When confronted by the Communist Party for her progressive teaching techniques, she began to identify with her oppressed grandmother and also the imprisoned young woman in Tolstoy's tale.

Christ became real to Pavlovna, as he has for so many, in a time of real soul searching and need.

Pavlovna has a challenging testimony: "I can truly say that I believe in Christ."

The English club at Nizhni Novgorod State University has flourished since Pavlovna founded it.

Pavlovna has since been promoted to the position of Associate professor of English and her English club has become "Venture," her university's "Students' International Exchange Center."

Though she confesses that she is a natural pioneer, Pavlovna states, "Why am I so successful? My students help me!"

She says that the organization she has founded is really "...a spiritual environment we created for ourselves to survive, our own little shelter."

During the 1990-91 academic year, Pavlovna met her "progressive counterpart in America," Taylor's own Dr. Steven Hoffman.

The two have since helped to establish a relationship between Taylor and Nizhni Novgorod State which resulted in a student exchange that took place during the summer and fall of 1991 and also Pavlovna's stay here this past semester.

According to Pavlovna this opportunity has been a real blessing since she was "...born free; born to travel."

Apparently her son Pavel has inherited Pavlovna's love of adventure and travel.

This past semester he studied at Eastbrook High. He took courses on both the 11th and 12th grade levels and his mother is very proud of his willingness to learn.

She says with experience, "learning a foreign culture is more difficult than learning a foreign language."

And when asked about Pavel, she merely replies, "Well, I love him!"

Pavlovna has certainly made an impact in the classroom at Taylor University as well. Stefan Kock comments about her class, "It's all conversation. It's the experience that's good." And, Danielle Beauchaine adds, "We feel like we're a part of it all." Pavlovna is only reflecting the views of the students who study Russian with her when she says, "Time just jumps out of the room with our class."

Taylor University students will always remember their first Russian professor and friend Bella Pavlovna. In her own words, "God has given us a gift like nothing else... friendship."

How strong are the relationships among faculty at Taylor?

Because we respect each other's abilities and differences, the faculty relationships at Taylor are strong. We represent different departments that contribute to one university. We are different people, who stand on one truth. How odd this place would be if we were all mathematicians or psychologists.

In Biblical Places

Taylor Students Study in Israel

In late August, nine Taylor students traveled to the Institute of Holy Land Studies in Jerusalem.

We experienced a semester of immeasurable learning and growth. The classes covered a broad variety of topics, from Biblical religion, history, geography, language and archaeology to classes on Islam or the Arab-Israeli conflict.

The class titled "Physical Settings of the Bible" allowed us to personally see and study each region in Israel.

At each place, Bill Schlegel (our enthusiastic professor) would read a certain passage of scripture that took place near where we were standing.

This really made the scriptures come to life, giving a visual picture that we will remember whenever we read different Biblical accounts.

Although we learned a lot in the classroom, the most beneficial times for the majority of us took place beyond the classroom walls.

Whether it was a Saturday night trip to the Blues Brothers cafe for a shawarma (and twelve free salads), a Tomb Room Classic volleyball match with roommates, a theological discussion with students from Master's College or our "conquering" of the Pyramids in Egypt, the events we experienced last fall will never leave our memories. Shalom!

A Capital Experience

Students visit a powerful place

These are the days." This might have been the theme for the 1992 American Studies Program.

Fall semester saw an unusually large number of Taylor students heading to Washington DC. for the historic election period, including Denise Crum, Annjannette Edwards, Charlie Harvey, Stacie Shopp, Dan Turello and Kristin Wolgemuth.

Masaki Kojima also visited the program in the spring.

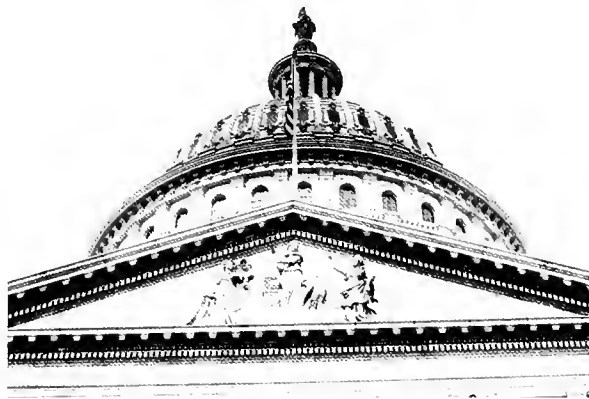

Students at the American Studies Program (ASP) spent the semester in various internships around the District in the 102nd Congress, the Library of Congress, the Christian College Coalition, and different international organizations like World Vision and Interaction.

Classroom study was also an important aspect of ASP.

While studying units in foreign, economic and domestic policy, students worked on campaigns, interviewed legislative policy makers and heard a variety of speakers who gave insights on the White House, Congress and Christian thought.

We learned the importance of being internally consistent with our thoughts and externally consistent with our actions.

Policy took on a new light as we evaluated it through Christian concerns like justice and reconciliation.

The same days we interviewed the policy makers, we also toured and worked in neighborhoods where children had nothing.

At such a critical time in our lives, we were exposed to the city of contrasts, the powerful and the powerless.

We left Upland and traveled to the big city with few friends or family.

We lived, ate and studied with the same forty people for four months.

Those people, the faculty and students, became our community, which challenged us to think like we had never thought before and to never separate our hearts from our heads.

In the end, this community involved friends and family. We will never be the same.

(Ed. Note: This story was received via FAX from Kristin's office in Washington, where she is applying skills she learned and capitalizing on connections she made last fall. She is working in the office of the Honorable Harris Fawell, Congressman from the Illinois 13th District.)

Is Taylor a Safe Place?

Taylor University has been blessed with a beautiful rural campus that has been, by God's grace, relatively free from violent crime.

This does not give us adequate reason to abandon discretion. Most people become victims of crime because they choose to involve themselves with person(s) who participate in questionable behavior that eventually results in victimization.

Does Taylor University have a safe campus? Yes, but safety is something that must constantly be guarded by the entire community if it is to be preserved.

The Department of Campus Safety is committed to the prevention of crime at Taylor University by maintaining continuous communication with the community regarding criminal activity and providing crime awareness programs designed to promote a safe and secure environment.

"You Shall Have a Song"

Taylor Sounds Travel and Worship

Music. From Doctor's office's to car radios, to concerts, to home stereos, loud, soft, fast, slow, with a driving beat, or with a flowing melody—music surrounds us in our everyday lives.

It allows us to take the feelings and thoughts that are locked up within us and blend them into what our souls long to convey.

As the Taylor Sounds learned this year, music provides us with a language to share completely with God our devotion, worship and praise.

The theme for the Sounds this year was "You Shall Have a Song," taken from Isaiah 30:29. The group sang approximately forty concerts throughout the year.

At each concert, Dr. Giger encouraged the audience to "sing" with us as they joined their hearts in worship. I think every member of the group gained a new appreciation for the joy of worship.

Suffering for Jesus over spring break, the Sounds made a pains-taking trip to the Phoenix and Los Angeles areas.

The journey had many highlights including concerts at Phoenix Christian School (where Dr. Giger first taught), Biola University, a visit to the Crystal Cathedral, a leap back to Medieval Times and Brad Johnson.

Above all, however, the name of the Lord Jesus was glorified through song. Let this be our calling until we see Him face to face. You have been given a song—so sing!

The Storm of the Century

Almost Dead Ringers

Five concerts in three days," I tell my parents before we left. What a weekend! Or so I expected.

The Taylor Ringers and I went to Pennsylvania for our Spring bell tour the weekend before Spring break.

With all those hours on a blue Taylor van, I had high hopes of studying for a Monday test.

But, as my bell-ringing friend Catha Cofield says "Something always happens to make a bell trip an adventure."

Just as we roll into Washington, PA, home of member Shelley Snyder, the snow began to fall. And it fell and fell-- 24 inches of it!

Too bad for Dave Ebersole and Heather Gladhill, whose home churches lay farther east through the snow-covered mountains where the roads have been closed already.

I suppose we'll just go home...NOT! The interstates closed behind us as well. So we're stranded.

I suppose this means no more concerts.. wrong again! We pack up and slide over to the local homeless mission downtown. Playing for those homeless men and women is one of the most meaningful concerts I've ever done.

But even that had to turn into an adventure. On the way back to our host's house the van and trailer got stuck in the snow-filled streets.

Two hours later we arrived at the Snyders and decided to settle in. I pulled out my notes and began to study, but not for long. Eighteen people in one house do not make for the best studying conditions.

We watched the weather channel, played euchre, made vital calls back to Taylor and ate the Snyder's last crumbs.

Monday morning the interstates finally opened up and we headed back to Taylor, books open, cramped by luggage and sick of snow.

It's funny how the worst experiences can turn into your fondest memories.

Other commitments have forced me to leave the Ringers after three year, but that last tour with bells will never leave me. I'll look back on my college career and say "I survived the Clinton years, I survived senior comps (hopefully) and I survived the Storm of the Century."

Class of 1993

By Daniel Mouw

Life Goes On

Senior Seminar was a time for reflection. The course was supposed to be the culmination of the entire "Taylor Educational Experience." It was intended to tie off the loose ends, answer the questions not covered in earlier classes and to allow the senior class to feel a sense of closure.

While it answered many questions, Senior Seminar raised many new questions. We could not help but think "Wow, look at all these people. I wonder when our paths will cross again?" The speakers were interesting, but with only four months to graduation, we were forced to ponder the precipice on which we stood.

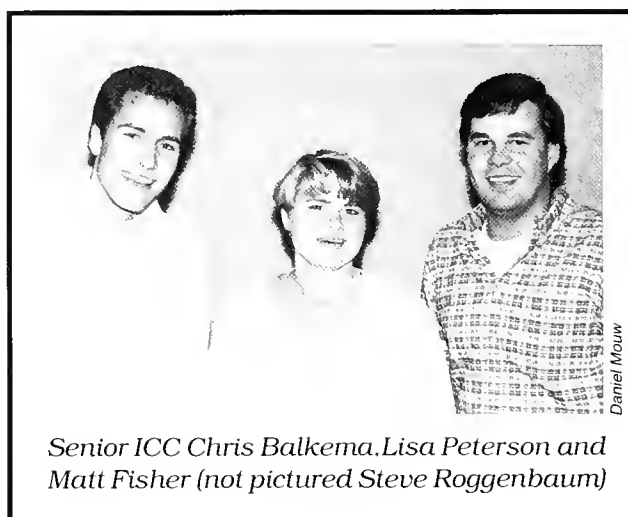

We could foresee the day when we would no longer be allowed to sleep late on Thursdays, to take afternoon naps or wear jeans with great big holes in them. It was time to get serious. We learned to send resumés, the proper way to interview and one of my roommates even learned to tie a tie. Our lighthearted youthful existence was drawing to a close.

Major decisions stared us down every day. We had to decide such weighty dichotomies as grad school or job market? Marriage or splitsville? Midwest or East Coast? And, most importantly, should we study for senior comps?

Fortunately, no challenge was faced alone. We were still surrounded by trusted classmates. We could share the disappointment of the fourteenth rejection letter, the joy of a job offer, or the difficulty of choosing between two job offers (it must have happened to someone).

In retrospect, the memories that the class of '93 carries from Taylor will be dominated by the memories of this last year. Off-campus living, intramural domination and senior comprehensives will all remain as memories of Taylor (some are better than others).

More important than all the stuff we did together is the fact that we did it together. The friendships built through this year will make our class reunions very exciting. I hope you all took pictures.

Class of 1994

By Brian Hoover

Active Juniors

When is the junior bagging?

Did you finalize your major?

We're more than half way done!

Are you going to pull another all-nighter?

Have you found the geek room?

How do you start a resume?

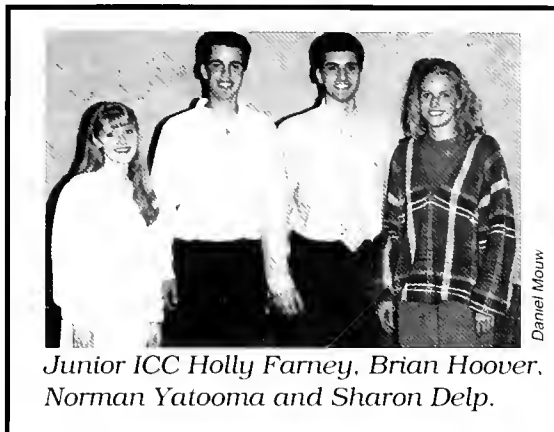

Did you get off campus?

Do we have a shot at Taylathon?

Will I graduate on time?

In our third year of rigorous academic pursuit, these are just a few questions we asked. We chose to take part in the life of the "Taylor Community," to one degree or another.

In the back of our minds we knew these days would soon pass. I know we all had times to laugh and love and learn and cry. And we did this with each other.

Junior ICC Holly Farney, Brian Hoover, Norman Yatooma and Sharon Delp.

Don Helton

← No hair to spare.

Marc Wilson cannot believe he just shaved his head.

↓ Swinging!

Norman Yatooma and Nicole Mayer enjoy a square dance.

Jim Garringer

Sophomore Attitude

By Alexandra Patterson

I heard something about myself lately— about all of us who are in the midst of our second year in college. It's this thing called "The Sophomore Attitude."

Supposedly it means that we are no longer freshmen and are proud of it and so we pick on them, knowing that we are still underclassmen and therefore, still peons. I decided it must be a guy thing.

My roommate says that being a sophomore means having more work than freshmen, more stress than freshmen. Less playtime, less of a life than freshmen. Is that the sophomore attitude? (No, she's a pre-med major).

So I am supposed to write about what being a sophomore means to me. Does that mean I say things like, "Gee, mom and dad, I'm so glad I came to Taylor this year?" No, I think it means more like, "Gee, guys, thanks for letting me be here."

Should I say something cheesy? Nah, a simple,

"Wow, I really have made some good friends here at school," will do.

Or what about how spiritual we are? Would you like to know about all of our class Bible studies and how many people come? Or would you rather hear me say that we love Christ and therefore love each other . . .

I never thought college students really cared what class they were in until 3/4 of us showed up at the sophomore mugging. Maybe they just wanted a mug.

To me, being a sophomore is everything from remembering the freshman campout (rainout) at the lake last year, to losing the Trojan Horse together, to electing Jeff Johnson as class president next year.

At the risk of being sentimental, being a member of the class of 1995 is more than having a common graduation date: it is being a part of a class that knows that college is not just academics, it is real friends.

Class of 1996

Largest Freshman Class in Taylor History

By Julie Scroggins

The largest Taylor class ever. Scope books with highlighted high school senior year mug shots. Proud wearers of matriculation ribbons. Learning to put a loft up. Cutting the apron strings. Being a part of the largest Taylor class ever. Living in the land of no curfew. Finding your place.

P.R.O.B.E. Early risers to "look good" at the D.C. or the 7:30 am class. Feeling a little self-conscious, or a little arrogant. Walking on campus—until Thanksgiving. The largest Taylor class ever.

Bodily adjustment to three shots of the D.C. per day. The women fearful of the "freshman fifteen." The men fearful of trying to find a car for the date they fearfully found. Lounge sleepers (because the five year temporary modular units are no longer overflow housing but hot semi-off-campus real estate). Embarking on a new season of their lives.

Eager faces with large pupils experiencing Dr. Cosgrove's freshman seminar class. The largest Taylor class ever.

Electing members of your class you don't know to represent you. Beginning the adventure of integrating faith and learning (a lifelong quest). Discovering the importance of Pick-A-Mates, I mean, Pick-A-Dates. Incidentally, the largest Taylor class ever.

Learning to share a bathroom with more than 20 others. Learning to adapt. Learning to trust. And, did I mention, the largest Taylor class ever?

What do all of these have in common?

This year's freshman class.

Joe Foote: the Man, the Legend

Melissa Halpern Interviews Our President

Parlez-vous francais?" I believe these were the first words Joe Foote ever spoke to me. Joe was in my Intermediate French class Fall 1990. The class met at 8 a.m. and to be certain, Joe is not a morning person.

Then, Joe was just an acquaintance—someone who sat in front of me in a class. Now, after working with him in the campus hub of activity, the student programs offices upstairs in the Union and harassing him for his biweekly column in The Echo, "Perspectives and Issues," (which was always late), I can honestly say Joe is a colleague and above all, a friend.

From a fledgling French student to student body president—Joe Foote.

MH: Well, Joe, here we are --the only two columnists at Taylor. Did you ever feel any pressure knowing that thousands of Taylor students and faculty were reading your "Perspectives and Issues" column?

JF: Well Melissa, Are you sure that you want to say "thousands"? Maybe your column was read by thousands, but to speak truthfully, it was a challenge and honor to share a page such an accomplished and distinguished journalistic leader as yourself.

MH: Oh, Joe, do stop— your election has long since been over and I did vote for you. Speaking of the election, what sticks out most in your mind about the race?

JF: Making it through the campaign was tough. The two aspects of the campaign which stand out in my mind were the fact that running for the position required me to always be "in the public eye." It seemed as if every move I made was constantly being watched and examined.

The arena of competition was the other aspect that stands out in my mind. That made a lasting impression upon my life.

MH: How about the actual position, student body president? Did that impact your life in any way?

JF: Yes, it most definitely did, in ways that make me realize I will never be the same again.

Through this position, I have learned many lessons about leadership and organization.

Here at Taylor, the words leadership and servanthood are used quite extensively and at times it is easy to lose focus on the true meaning and relevance of those words. This position has taught me the significance and relevance of these words.

The importance of time management, delegation, accountability and communication are traits that I have personally learned which have been reinforced through this position.

I have also learned that with leadership comes sacrifice. Time is probably one of those areas that one should be willing to sacrifice the most when being involved in leadership.

Well I've babbled on long enough. Our readers can hear more when my book comes out.

MH: Oh, are you writing a book?

JF: Well, no, not in the near future, I should say. I guess I was just using the politically correct phrase for "I don't have time to say anymore and Melissa wants to go on with the interview."

MH: Joe, I always have time for you. I am sure everyone is aware of your former President George Bush impersonations. Do you have any plans to add Bill Clinton to your repertoire?

JF: Well, it's funny that you bring that up because in conjunction with your previous question about the campaign, my George Bush impersonations probably aided me to a great extent. "Oh yeah... the guy who does the George Bush impersonations at airbands," was usually the response from someone who may not have known who I was on a personal level.

MH: That is why I voted for you.

JF: Thanks! Regarding Bill Clinton, "I guess I could say that it's time for a change and I want to be an agent of change where change is necessary..." Sorry. I do wish that I could have broadened and expanded my impersonation file, although it has grown a little to include Professor Jones and, uh, well...

At this point Joe's face turns as red as a tomato and he begins to laugh hysterically.

MH: Breathe, Joe. Breathe.

JF: Okay...well since you asked, the other addition is the infamous ghost that haunts The Echo office every Thursday night.

MH: That's right. How could I have forgotten your ghost imitation. Do you ever pretend you are a ghost in the mod?

JF: Not really, because my ghost impersonation is quite mild compared to what usually happens in that mod with Norman, Matt, Landy, Mike and Dan.

MH: Nice way to get your friends in... ahem. You room with Norman Yatooma, don't you?

JF: Yes.

MH: Don't you think it is rather strange that two roommates have been consecutive student body presidents?

JF: No.

MH: Mr. President, is there something you are trying to hide?

JF: Are you accusing me of a conspiracy of some sort? If so, then I can without reservation affirm that nothing was done that would compromise the integrity and values that are of extreme importance to myself and this institution.

Besides, if we are keeping things within the context of the national arena, you're supposed to be part of the "liberal media" and technically we're not supposed to get along. Fortunately though, you're not Diane Sawyer.

MH: Yeah and you're no Jack Kennedy. How do you feel about leaving your office to Norman?

JF: I feel all right. He wants me to leave my desk lamp and clock, but I...

MH: No, I meant office as in the position of student body president.

JF: Oh, well, I feel extremely comfortable leaving the office to such a competent roommate, confidante and friend as Norm. "Nothing but the best to you, buddy!"

MH: That's really sweet, Joe. Any parting words of wisdom to Taylor?

JF: Well Melissa, the last episode of Cheers is about to start and...

MH:... Sorry, Joe, I don't want to cut you off, but I've got to go...

JF:... to see Cheers?

MH: No, I've got to pack.

JF: Okay, "because making your way in the world today takes everything you got. Taking a break from all your worries sure would help a lot. Wouldn't you like to get away..."

Passing the Torch

Joe to Norman

Transition is a vital part of the political world. From one United States Presidential administration to another, history is filled with transfers of goals, agendas and dreams for the nation.

As is the case with the nation as a whole, so it is with our own microcosm of American society, Taylor University.

As Ronald Reagan completed his transfer of power to George Bush only four short years ago and just recently George Bush did the same with Bill Clinton, I "pass the torch" of the Taylor Student Body President to my successor, Norman Andrew Yatooma.

Norman is not only a successor, more importantly, he is a friend. I will forever hold dear memories of writing this year's final "Perspectives and Issues" together and memories of lying awake at nights or late in the morning discussing topics ranging from TSO business to plans for the next weekend.

Making up the flame of this torch are many sparks. The goals, dreams, successes and failures of the current Taylor Student Organization are sparks that will hopefully keep the flame of the torch ignited and burning brighter.

With the passing of this torch come many responsibilities and struggles.

In the paradoxical words of John F. Kennedy, when asked about his feelings and reactions regarding his first term in office, he was quoted as saying he "loved the job, the pay was good and he could even walk to work."

Later on in his term, however, he was quoted as saying that at times the burden of office was more than he could bare and sometimes he felt as if the entire weight of the world was on his shoulders.

In a small way, this is very similar to the office of student body president. There will be some triumphant times, but there will be some disappointing times. Above all, as the incoming TSO administration charges forward with new goals and agendas, hold fast to the familiar verse, Proverbs 3:5, "Trust in the Lord with all of your heart."

TAYLOR WORLD OUTREACH

A Unique Spring Break

Building Their Walls, Breaking Down Ours

When I began thinking about spring break this year, my main goal was to go anywhere but home.

My roommate and I wanted to travel South and hit the beach, but our meager bank accounts wouldn't quite cover the bill.

At a hall meeting in Olson in one night, Jane Oyler shared about a trip she and Steve Beers were taking to do hurricane relief work.

Several weeks later, thanks to the financial generosity of my grandparents and my tax returns, I was watching the mile markers fly by—thirty other Taylor students and I headed for Miami.

We arrived in Florida on a Sunday, spent the afternoon at the beach, and moved into the two-shower Greater Miami Youth for Christ office where we were to stay.

During the week we painted and reroofed a house which was being rented by a Mexican family and we cleaned out the junk which had accumulated in their backyard during the hurricane.

We also built two tent platforms to house groups like ours at a place called Samaritan's Purse. We were surprised to see how the people who lived there were dealing with the devastation. It was different from other missions trips because many of the people were very much like us and lived in homes like ours.

Most people don't spend their spring breaks working hard without pay and sharing crowded living quarters for fun—but most of our group would tell you that it was their best spring break ever.

Even though we were a diverse group and many of us had never met, we daily aimed to fulfill Paul's exhortation in 1 Peter 3:8, "Finally, all of you, live in harmony with one another, be sympathetic, love as brothers, be compassionate and humble."

There were difficulties, but some of the stereotypes were broken down and new friendships were found. If I said I went only to serve the people of Miami, it would be a lie. I went also because of unity, friendships and fun—and the weather in Miami is nice...

Outstretched Hands

Spectrum Acts to Change Lives

I laughed, I cried. It was better than the movie.

Actually, there never was a movie, or a play for that matter. But there was a dream and a vision. And eleven people who wanted to make the dream a reality.

Spectrum was never really easy. Granted, the performances were draining both physically and emotionally, but it was more of the off-stage experience that took a toll on all of us. Our last Sunday together was spent in Indianapolis with a morning service at an inner-city church. It was experiences like this one that challenged our group as we saw people literally dying without Christ. This changed me like nothing else has.

And we learned about each other. We heard things that we didn't want to hear, but we grew as a team and as individuals. I learned about hands.

Hands with fingers that point at us. Hands that grope for something to hold onto. Hands that whiten as they clench into fists and hands that touch hostile shoulders.

Little hands that tried to hold Jimmy. (The little girls always wanted to kiss him after performances.) Wrinkled hands that told of heartache, struggle and victory. Hands that belonged to me—needing to be pierced so that I, with my sin and pride, might die.

Nail scarred hands. Hands that reach out to me and you in spite of everything. Bleeding hands of love that say, "Come to Me, I love you."

The International Soup House

An Open Door and a Hot (Global) Feast

Six men from five countries living together in one place they call the "International Soup House."

If you walked into their kitchen, you would see a placemat on the table with the words, "Have you eaten lately? Feel free to eat. When you finish, please replace the utensils."

According to resident Tony Seow, everybody who comes to the house is welcome. "We buy boxes and boxes of Ramen noodles and they can come in and sit down and have some soup," he said. "It is kind of like a soup kitchen. That is how the house got the name the International Soup House."

Soup House "policy" was to have an open door to everyone. "We used to have a key in the front door," senior Dan Turello said. "People would walk in and, thinking we had left the key in the door, tell us."

"The point of leaving the key there is to have the door open at all times," Seow added. If the door is locked, you can still come in," he said. "Unfortunately, the key has since disappeared."

In addition to Seow and Turello, seniors Phil Baarendse, Stefan Eicher, Ong Toon Wah and Nathanael Tuggy live in the house. They represent Singapore, Italy, Austria, India and Venezuela.

These men have a high regard for food. "Three hour meals—that is the essence of life," Turello said.

He added that these meals, sometimes Turello's own Garlic Spaghetti, often come at late hours of the night.

They wanted to share this regard for food with professors and fellow students and began hosting dinners each Friday.

They each took turns preparing a meal, often from their native country and inviting others over. They would even go and pick up their guests in a van, escorted by a motorcycle.

"When we started the Friday dinners, we hoped to spend a lot of time interacting cross-culturally," Seow explained.

By inviting others over, it exposes them to the richness of culture at the house, providing a more informal setting than the classroom to sit and talk.

"At first we were prim and proper and very polite," Baarendse said. "Now it has become very informal."

House rules for the men included a dress shirt and tie requirement. At dinner, the one-arm length rule was followed; if something is further than one arm's length away, you must ask for it and the person you are asking must be formally addressed.

For instance, "Mr. Ong, would you pass the chicken Number 17." When the men didn't entertain for others, they had their own dinners with a specific international focus.

The six men are generous with their house as well as their food, hosting many different events. "To me this place is not just my place, it is a place for everyone," Seow said. "It is the closest thing to a fraternity house that Taylor has."

When asked what he thought about the Soup House being a kind of fraternity house, Baarendse replied, "I don't necessarily know what a fraternity house is, so I wouldn't know. I like this because here, people live together. We are able to bring differences out among our cultures."

Baarendse went on to explain why this living situation is so unique.

"Each of us come from different socio-economic backgrounds and the whole idea of how you approach problems is different," he added.

"I have never been to the third world. I grew up in Europe and then I came here for school," he continued. "After living here, I have lived with an Indian, a Venezuelan and two Singaporeans. I feel that I have learned so much about the world, more than I could from any history book."

Five out of the six International Soup House residents have now graduated and for the first time in a year, the door is closed.

Hotbed of Controversy?

Echo Strives for Credibility

It's Friday morning. Dan Mouw and I are waiting for the crowd to file into chapel so that we can put The Echoes on the stairs.

"Dan, what do you think people are going to say about the homosexuality story?"

"Well, Mel, you've always wanted The Echo to be the hotbed of controversy."

It is true—earlier this year The Echo staff would joke about the newspaper "not necessarily being a hotbed of controversy." And, as the year progressed, Karen Van Prooyen, editor, was heard to say on more than one occasion "If one more person tells me what to put in The Echo . . ."

This year we set out not to be controversial, but to be substantial. In a sense, as the editorial board, we wanted to "boldly go where no other editorial board had gone before."

We wanted to raise important issues and generate healthy debate, so we did a three-part series on homosexuality and reported the results of the 1992 Student Life Survey.

We wanted to keep Taylor abreast on campus news and sports, so we covered the academic dean selection process and followed the Trojan basketball team to Kansas City.

We wanted to entertain and humor both students and faculty, so we gave our "2 Cents Worth" and even attempted to learn Russian.

Essentially, we wanted to produce a weekly newspaper that all of Taylor would respect, read, remember and most of all, recycle.

Sure, occasionally we were referred to as "the Godless media circus," but all things considered, I think we put out a pretty good newspaper.

I guess we had some fun, too. Thursday nights and Friday mornings became "The Echo Night" and the editorial board members became friends.

We shared inside jokes and musical tastes (mine). We shared office space with Taylor's finest, (no, not campus safety) TSO and computers with "the other" Taylor print medium, the Illum. We shared both criticism and praise and success and failure. Heck, we shared just about everything, even bylines.

But above all, we shared a love for journalism that challenged us to ethically and legally bring the Taylor family up to date on everything that affected our community.

Hopefully, stashed in a drawer or hope chest, you have a wrinkled, yellowing copy of a 1992-93 The Echo. If so, look on the banner where the name appears on the front page. Printed underneath the school address is the phrase, "Ye shall know the truth." The editorial board of The Echo, set out to do one thing this year, present the truth.

As a wise and honest man, Abraham Lincoln, once said, "Let the people know the facts and the country will be saved." That's what we gave: "Just the facts, ma'am."

Confessions of a Campus Cop

A Difficult Dichotomy

Working as a campus safety officer while being a full time student has given me a unique view of Taylor.

The first week of fall semester, 1989, I walked into the safety office to inquire about a job. Little did I know I would be there for all four of my college years.

The double role of authority figure and student has been challenging. I meet students and build friendships with them in the classroom during the day and later at night have to face the same students in an often negative situation of enforcing the rules of the Taylor community.

Several times I have had to give good friends speeding tickets, tell them to stop launching water balloons and tell them they cannot "park" at the lake. Through these experiences, I have been able to identify my real friends.

This past year has been the most challenging as I mixed heavy academic loads with service as a full-time officer.

In the fall I completed my student teaching and worked the evening shift. This meant getting out of bed every morning at seven and not getting to sleep until after midnight.

In the spring things were even tougher. I became involved in a research-oriented independent study as well as completing my normal course load.

Would I do it again? Sometimes I would say "NO WAY!" But, overall, I would have to say that I would.

I feel I have gained the respect of students by showing them compassion and firmness.

Finally, I think that through my work as a campus safety officer, I have contributed to making the Upland campus of Taylor University a safe place for students to live, relax and study.

Although it has been tough at times (as my wife will testify), I am glad that I have had a chance to get to know Taylor and its student body on these two different levels.

Called 4

Men With a Mission

Most Taylor students would know them by their popular rendition of Jingle Bells sung at "Jay's Christmas Special" or at the Christmas Celebration Chapel.

But these four men are much more than that one song. Within the past six months, Called 4 has made its own recording at the Bill Gaither studios in Alexandria and toured through six states to the East, not to mention singing just about every weekend at churches, banquets, on the spot singing in lounges, birthday parties and at Ivanhoe's.

Senior Derek Sanford and juniors Jeff Burden, Kip Kline and Brent Rudin combine their voices in four-part harmony, creating the sounds of Called 4.

When asked what drives this group to sing, Rudin replied "We rotate drivers."

But seriously, according to Kline, "It is different for every individual, but for me it is the love of singing and the love of people combined. It has been about being together all the time, getting sick of each other and then finding something new to like about them.

"It also is ministering to tons and tons of people of all age groups. That is enough to keep the drive going."

"Our purpose took hold of us," Rudin said. "We knew we wanted to give concerts in churches, but we didn't fully understand our impact."

"All the opportunities we had were laid in our laps, we didn't seek them out," he added.

This includes recording their first album.

After a concert in Greenville, Ohio, their host family asked if they would be interested in making a recording. "We of course responded affirmatively," Kline said.

"I describe [going through the recording process] to most people as feeling pretty good about it when we left to go to Alexandria," Kline said. "By the time we left at 2 a.m., we were afraid to go back."

The group had ten recording sessions during January which began at 10 p.m. and lasted until 2 a.m. "January seems like a blur," Rudin commented.

That blur resulted in their first album "Get Excited."

During Spring Break, the group decided to tour out East and in a ten day period, sang 14 concerts in churches and schools.

In addition to announced concerts, the group decided to sing every where it went. This included a bathroom at a rest stop. "There were great acoustics," Rudin said.

As Sanford graduates, the future of Called 4 is in question.

"As far as we know, Called 4 is over. We are going to keep in touch and we are not going to say we will never sing again," Kline said.

A PLACE TO SLEEP

Stefan Eicher on Chapel

ell, yes..chapel. This is a wonderful time. I feel as if it is a period of justified relaxation.

As a Taylor University student it is my responsibility to attend chapel. I thus feel no guilt in abandoning academic pursuits and gathering with my friends.

And then the lights; they're usually so nice and dim. And sitting in the balcony is beautiful for stretching out. The music is soothing and eventually the speaker's voice turns into a steady hum. Everything starts to fade, and I just feel so at one with the rest of campus. I feel so loved and secure, almost like returning to my mother's womb. The mind easily wanders to distant times and places, though every now and then I am abruptly awakened by dog whistles or loud clapping.

What I really like the most about chapel is that it is the one and only time of day I can rest assured that I am at the right place at the right time.

And finally, when all is said and done, it is my philosophy that if the speaker is good enough...he will keep me awake.

On Being a "Lifter"

Kansas City or Bust

In conceiving what it is like to be a Taylor Cheerleader, I must confess my inability to speak for the women. I will, however, attempt to tell the story of every male "lifter" that has gone before me and that will come after me, so that you may know us more fully.

If I had to narrow down the many reasons that I've heard of why men want to be cheerleaders, I believe, after cutting through the flesh and hitting the bone, two basic reasons are discovered.

First, it is the babes and second, it is Kansas City.

How can I tell you about Kansas City? Getting out of class for a week right before spring break, or maybe it's the thrill of being in Kemper Arena, floor side and watching the team play its guts out.

Quite possibly it is the excitement of engaging in the reckless abandon of hedonistic activities like euchre and spades. And certainly the exhilaration of having many co-cheerleaders of the female persuasion swarming about the hotel is no small potatoes.

All in all, what embodies the meaning of the trip to Kansas city is the ten-hour drive home.

For those of you who have experienced it, I need say no more, but to those of you who have not, I'm sorry.

Parnassus

(Ed. Note In attempting to write about Parnassus, we discovered the volume contained many poems which gave an accurate description, with an economy of words, of the artistic mind. Rather than write about these artists, we have obtained their permission to reprint several of their works for those who were not fortunate enough to purchase a limited edition 1993 Parnassus. Enjoy. Economics October 15

I saw leaves today
In the clothes of autumn
And they giggled to the soft ground,
Fell asleep,
And sank into next year.

There is a point where Science stops and Shakespeare begins.
When you finally stop hearing the grumbling
And counting of numbers
And chemists washing their hands.

This is where white is beautiful
Where love, life is green
And fat, and bottomless Pockets. It is cool liquid
Recess that drifts and excites

Into a summer vacation with no bears.

Rhubarb Pie

I had a dream last night
In which I walked to a river
To watch my life flow by
And two old ladies were there
Eating pie as part of their own peculiar brand of Christianity
"Won't see Jesus unless you eat pie, every day at noon," they said.
So I ate a piece of rhubarb pie with them, and asked about all the others
Those who would be lost
And why no one had told me to eat pie
Smiling quietly to themselves
"You're eating it now," they said.

I'd see you coming with books cradled, carefully against your sweater, and I'd always want to stop, to say something sudden and profound to show you that I, too, carry these books as a shield against our dull impressive peers, against our precious pain, against our blaring television world.
I, too, am calmed
by smell of book and pages.

*I*t's 4:30 AM and I'm leaving for Guatemala in an hour. This wouldn't be for the Ilium if it were not last-minute.) We've all heard it said many times that these are the best four years of our lives. I never liked hearing that because I thought that it implied that life goes downhill from here. Well now I have graduated and I understand.

Never again will I live, work, and see all my friends within a mile radius. Never again will I be almost completely surrounded by so many that share values so similar to my own. Never again will I live in a house with eight other girls who managed to get along; in fact, they became best of friends.

Yeah, I understand what they meant. These have been the best years so far. But I have confidence that there are brighter days ahead. (I'm looking forward to my new roommate, David.) Yet, I know that I will look back on these years with the fondest of memories, which brings me to this book.

Benjamin Franklin said "Say things worth writing about and write things worth reading." Many things were said and done in the 1992-3 school year that merit being recorded. I hope our writing of them is worth your reading.

Oh, and Don, you are my hero.

*S*tories. From Dr. Zhivago to Dr. Seuss, we all remember stories. I think it is because we all have one. Nonetheless, I find it intriguing that some 1,800 stories intersect in one place for nine months and it is our job as a yearbook staff to weave them into one. It is ridiculous to suppose that four people could give the entire meaning of the 1992-93 school year. I leave that to you, the reader. We have presented a skeleton of the events and happenings of this year, but it is up to you to hang your own particular stories on that rough frame. I hope that the stories we present will enable you to remember the real story. Maybe something in this book will remind you of a certain conversation, an important decision or a lesson learned.

At the same time, I make no apologies for the story we present. I would like to thank Don for making the stories more colorful and Julie for making the stories more readable. Most of all, I would like to thank my ever-patient co-editor, Dorie, without whom this book never would have been completed.

I hope that in looking at this book in thirty years, you can laugh at the clothes and the haircuts and remember the real story behind this year. May God bless you as you continue to write your story.

I am a photographer by trade, and not a writer; therefore I will be neither overly trenchant nor gelastic in the following prose. Although I am in an unbelievable state due to the completion of this annual of Taylor history, I would like to take this opportunity to express my gratitude to several people.

To Dorie for being my editor, my mom, and my friend, Dan for being, along with many other things, an editor with a creative mind, Julie for always having a positive word and Lisa for her encouragement and support.

I'd also like to thank the Echo staff for being more than just the people in the next office, Kevin for being a great roommate, Jim Garringer for all his help and my profs for having mercy on an overcommitted photographer. To Joe, Norman, Scott, Alex, Mark, Caitlin, Kenny and Erica for your friendship; it is appreciated more than you will ever know.

Finally I would like to thank couches everywhere, especially the one in the Echo office, for providing a haven of tranquility for a narcoleptic photographer.

Colophon

Volume 95 of the Taylor University Ilium was Printed by Herff Jones Yearbooks, Marceline, MO. Offset Lithography was used from layouts produced by Herff Jones' Pagemaster template for Aldus Pagemaker software on a MacIntosh.

Color photographs were processed at Jack's in Muncie or through various mail-in color labs. Black and White photos were taken and processed by Taylor Students or the Campus photographer Jim Garringer, who could not possibly get enough credit. Par Photo, 1077 Gravius Rd. Fenton, MO, is responsible for the student portraits.

The Cover was executed on Herff Jones' Custom embossing plan using Pale Gold New Century Schoolbook lettering on a Deep Plum background with a hand-tooled grain.

If you are still reading this, you probably would like to know that the body copy for "In Place" is 10 pt. Palatino, with the exception of the index, which is Times 9 pt. Captions are 10 pt. Helvetica, and photo credits are 6 pt. Helvetica.

Headlines for student life, sports, album and organizations sections were created using Aldus Freehand in a New Century Schoolbook font and stretched as needed. Academic headlines are Zaph Chancery with the subheads done in Helvetica. These, too, were done in Aldus Freehand and stretched as needed.

Sports dropcaps were created in Aldus Typestyler in Nashville Bold and submitted as art.

Also created in Typestyler were the Index letters, which were done in Raphael. The index was created using a Panarama Database and Annie Bergsten's keen eyesight.

The press run for "In Place" was 1,700 books. It was distributed without charge to all 1992-93 Students on Taylor University's Upland Campus in the Fall of 1993.

Inquiries regarding the book should be directed to Ilium, 500 W. Reade Ave., Taylor University, Upland, IN 46989-1001.

Phone calls may be directed to Carol Owen, Communication Arts Office, (317) 998-5255.
